The class play given by the raduates of our high school Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week was one of the most unique entertainments ever given in our city. The play was a turlesque or travesty on "The Merchant of Venice," and while it partook of the famous Shakespearean drama, in that characterization and characters were the same, yet circling in and around the later day school ideas, with football ac-companiments, it gave a zest to the performance that appealed to the audience as the real thing could not have done. The Famous :. Turbine Disc Bowl

The most important feature of a cream separator is the bowl. The value of the machine depends, to a great extent, upon its bowl. The "Success" separator is equipped with the world famous TURBINE DISC BOWL. Simple and yet so strong. No small holes, no sharp corners, no corrugated surfaces, no obstructions from the center to the outside. A disc well made, easily cleaned and one that will keep pure and sweet. The Turbine principle is fast becoming the most universal motive power of the mechanical world, both for land and water, because the Turbine requires less power to operate, while it develops greater force. It requires less space, and gives greater speed than any other known method of developing energy. There is no guess work about the operation of separation with the "Success" separator. The cream passes one way, the milk in the opposite direction. No interference, no guess work.
