Frightful Accident
S. E. Galloway received a letter yesterday from his brother at Buffalo, N. Y., under date of the 14th inst., telling of a frightful injury to a young son of his on that date. The boy, aged possibly 12 or 13 years, was in a stable adjoining a factory in which was stored a barrel of alcohol, when it exploded carrying away the upper jaw of the little fellow, tearing away his upper lip and sending three teeth through the side of his face. A hurry call brought three physicians and the boy was taken to the hospital, where his wounds were dressed, but at the time of the writing it had not been determined the extent of the injury, although it would seem that it might terminate fatally, or at the very least disfigure him for life. It is to be hoped late reports may prove the accident an injury less terrible than the first letter would indicate. The sympathy of the many friends of Mr. Galloway and Mrs. H. S. Conger will be with them over the awful injury to their little nephew.

A Cockroach Remedy.
A housekeeper who was recommended to try cucumber peelings as a remedy for cockroaches strewed the floor with pieces of the peel cut not very thin and watched the sequel, says a writer in Suburban Life. The pests covered the peel in a short time so that it could not be seen, so voraciously were they engaged in sucking the poisonous moisture from it. The second night that this was tried the number of cockroaches was reduced to a quarter and none were left on the third night.
