The editor last week received an interesting letter from his son, Frank, who is stationed at Fortress Monroe, Va., in the Coast Artillery, giving the welcome news that he had passed a creditable examination for first-class gunner, with an increase in pay, and of course feels good over his promotion. Fortress Monroe is just across the bay from the coming Jamestown Exposition and just now they are busy at the fort in preparation for Uncle Sam's part in the display. Frank says, "We are going over there next month to mount one 12-inch and one 10-inch disappearing rifles, two 6-inch rifles, two mortars and three rapid firing guns. One troop of cavalry, one company of field artillery, one company of coast artillery and one company of infantry will be kept at Jamestown during the exposition, which last several months. Besides these, battleships from every nation will be there and we expect fine sights and glorious times. Will write you about everything as the time passes. Wish you could be here." We rather envy the boy his experience and the sights he will witness.
