Quite a number of Loup City people went down to Austin last Sunday to attend the dedication of the new Presbyterian church at that place. The building was crowded to its utmost capacity, the seats capable of holding about 140 persons was wholly taken up, many seats brought from the school house, which were also taken and large numbers occupied the standing room and were thronged about the building on the outside. Rev. McEwen preached the dedicatory sermon and then lifted the indebtedness off the church, which only amounted to some $200. The house of worship is an extra fine one, much finer than one would suppose could have been builded in such a small place, with only a farm population to support it, but the people of the country surrounding Austin are a progressive community and evidently considered nothing was too good and so secured the best. They are to be congratulated on the outcome and have one of the neatest and most commodious churches in this section of the country and entirely free of indebtedness, which is a pearl of great price to them.

Culley's reputation as a rain prophet is saved barely by the skin of his teeth. He promised rain for Sunday, and behold a few drops fell a little south and west of Austin between 5 and 6 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Score one by a hair's breadth for A. P. as a weather prophet.
