Bucking Bicycle

Fay Paist, employed at the First National Bank a couple of weeks during the absence of O. E. Adams, was the victim of a rather serious accident one week ago Sunday. He left here that morning on his wheel for his home at Elita and when a few miles east of Ashton and about 8 o'clock in the morning he was in some way thrown from the wheel at the bottom of a hill, where he was found unconscious and taken to a nearby farm, suffering with bruises from head to foot and unable to continue his journey home. When found, Mr. Paist was lying near a small bridge, his wheel being on the opposite side of the structure uninjured. It is believed that in going down the hill the wheel struck some obstruction or a small ditch across the road, which was noticed, and he lurched headlong, striking against the bridge, although Mr. Paist remembered nothing of the occurrence. He returned here last Thursday, showing bad lacerations on head, face and body, and being too badly injured to continue work, left the next day for Elita, where he has not been heard from since.

It is hardly fair and equitable treatment to people, and especially those having infant children, to be awakened near the midnight hour with the unearthy and unmusical tooting on band instruments, along the streets or in the homes. A close application of the Golden Rule would prevent the nuisance and give no cause for complaint along this line.

R. H. Mathew returned home last Saturday evening from his European trip, just in time to file for county attorney before the close of the last hour. He has brought home hundreds of views of the famous scenes of his trip and curios without number for the delectation of his friends. Bob looks hale and hearty and breathes long sighs of relief that he is home again, although he has had the experience and vacation of a lifetime.

Gus Lorentz received word Tuesday that Mrs. Lorentz had started home that day, but when taking the train she was again taken ill and had to return to her father's home. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Lorentz received a message that she was worse and drove over to Ravenna by auto with Will Criss, the latter returning that evening with the distressing news that Mrs. Lorentz would undoubtedly have to be taken to a hospital immediately to undergo an operation for appendicitis. We trust she may pass through the ordeal safely.

The description of the "Passion Play" by W. R. Mellor at the M. E. church last Sunday evening, as witnessed by him at Oberammergau, on his European trip, was heard by an audience that filled the church to overflowing, every seat being occupied and many unable to gain admittance. For forty minutes he held the audience in breathless silence while he gave a vivid picture of the life of Christ with scenes of the crucifixion, as portrayed in the play, making it one of the most interesting talks we ever heard and carrying his hearers with him every moment from the opening to the closing of his lecture.

Successful Operation

Mr. John Daddow of this city, who had been suffering severely for the past few years from some unexplained physical trouble, and which seemed to baffle his medical advisors, was taken to the hospital at Grand Island last Saturday morning and on the afternoon of that day an operation was performed on him for appendicitis, with which he was claimed to have been suffering for a long time, and for which he should have been operated on two or three years previous. Besides this, it was found he had enlargement of the liver and an operation relieved him of a large quantity of pus formed in that member, and he was also relieved of a number of gall stones. The hospital people claimed that had he waited two or three days longer it would have been too late to have done any good. As it is, reports daily since the operation have been to the effect that he is improving, with good chances of ultimate recovery. Mr. Daddow was accompanied to the hospital by his brothers, Samuel and Thomas, and by his son-in-law, Al Cook, who returned Monday, much encouraged over conditions. Tuesday Mrs. Daddow was at the bedside of her husband, returning that evening very hopeful, and since that time one or the other of his brothers has been with him continually, constant reports being received here favorable in every respect. The case is a most miraculous one, and should Mr. Daddow recover, will be a splendid in surgery.
