Story of Trio of Celebrities

How William Orton Got Appointment For Tim Campbell's Father and How Roscoe Conkling Upheld the Action.

In the informal political history of the country the late Timothy D. Campbell, state senator and congressman from New York's East Side, gained fame when he narrowly asked President Cleveland, "What is the Constitution between friends?" In the realm of telegraphy the late William Orton has a niche as one of the great presidents of the Western Union Telegraph company. Long after his other deeds have been forgotten Roscoe Conkling will be remembered as the man whose hatred of James G. Blaine caused the "Plumed Knight" to be defeated for the presidency by Grover Cleveland.

"At the time when Tim Campbell was chairman of the committee on civics at Albany," said Mr. Orton, "a piece of 'strike' legislation affecting the telegraph interests was introduced in the legislature and had the support of a certain lobby. We had opportunity enough to hire another lobby to defeat the measure, but we would not do it. Instead we appeared before the civics committee and made arguments against the proposed legislation; but the outcome of our efforts seemed pretty dubious to us."

"At last I saw Senator Campbell and asked him if he could give me aid in any way, provided he could do so conscientiously. He told me in reply that he considered the measure an outrageous one and that he would do his best, as chairman of the committee, to kill it, and he did."

"After the legislature had adjourned I sent for Senator Campbell and when he had come to me I said: 'Senator, I want to express my thanks for what you have done for my company. You have done us a very great service, and I should like to acknowledge it in some way.'

"Mr. Orton," Tim replied, "there isn't any way in which you can acknowledge the service except by such thanks as you have just spoken. I did what I thought was my duty as a legislator."

"But," I persisted, "wouldn't you like to take a trip to Europe? Something along that line is the least we can do."

"Oh, no," Tim replied. "Then he came over from the White House to get such election returns as had been received by the war department. The returns were not coming in very fast, and Mr. Lincoln, deciding to remain awhile, sat down on the old sofa which stood at the rear end of Secretary Stanton's office. With him was Whitehall Reid, who, at that time, was the Washington correspondent of one of the Cincinnati newspapers."

"Pretty soon Mr. Lincoln pulled a pamphlet from his pocket and began to read it to Mr. Reid. Occasionally, he gave way to laughter and displayed other genuine evidences of being intensely amused by the humor of the article he was reading. It was as I remember one of a collection of some of the humorous papers of Petroleum V. Nasby, the nom de plume of the editor of the Toledo Blade—humorous sarcasm that had great vogue at that time."

"I saw that Stanton was getting annoyed, and at last he took me to one side. 'Can you understand that?' he asked, indignantly, nodding in the direction of the president. 'The destiny of this nation is dependent upon this election. We shall know before morning whether the cause of the Union has been triumphant at the polls or not. And there sits the man, around whom this election centers, on that sofa reading that miserable trash, and laughing at it as though he were the most unconcerned man in the United States over the results of the election I can't stand it!'

"And I said to Stanton: 'I tell you why he's reading Nasby. It is simply to relieve the terrific strain—mental and temperamental—that is upon him. If he did not get relief in that way, he would die or go crazy.' And I do believe that until that moment Secretary Stanton had no appreciation whatever of the real reason why Lincoln sought refuge and consolation in humor in what were critical or dark moments of the war and the nation."

"I should say that about 10 o'clock—perhaps a little later—Mr. Lincoln

The Realm of Fiction. Mr. Graham threw down his newspaper with an expression of annoyance. "It's too much when the daily papers begin to print fairy tales," he said.

"Let me see it," said Mrs. Graham. "Perhaps I could read it to the children at bedtime tonight."

"It's not that kind," said her husband. "This is the story of a young plumber's assistant who declared that he worked so fast that it was not fair to pay him by the hour, but that he should be paid by the job."—Youth's Companion.

Wireless Lighting. Wireless lighting as a possibility is no surprise, so it was merely the expected that happened when M. Vlademar Poulsen, the Danish inventor, pressed the contacts of his aerial transmitter and thus lighted two incandescent lamps held by his assistant in another room. The miracle will come when the radiated energy can be so directed to a distance that the loss will not be enormously greater than that by wire transmission.

hesitated, as though a sudden thought had come to him; and pretty soon he went on:

"Mr. Orton, now that I come to think of it, there is something that possibly you can do. My dear old father is a good man. He goes to church every Sunday; and that is more than I do. He has voted the Republican ticket occasionally; and that is more than I have done. And he has one queer ambition—he would be the happiest man on earth if he could be appointed messenger in the outer office of the postmaster of New York City? That would make him a very proud man. If you can persuade the postmaster to appoint him to that office, I shall be deeply grateful."

"A few hours later," continued Mr. Orton, "I took up the matter with the postmaster. I knew that I had no right to ask for the political favor, and the postmaster knew it, but after I had told him of my conversation with Tim Campbell, he declared that it would give him great pleasure to appoint the senator's father a messenger in his outer office. 'But,' he added, 'it will get me into hot water with the organization.' Nevertheless, the old man was given the post he had so long coveted, and it was almost pathetic to see the joy with which he accepted that humble appointment."

No Dress-Suit For Garland

Arkansas Senator, When Offered Attorney Generalship, Said That He Couldn't Take Part in Society Affairs in Washington.

After President-elect Grover Cleveland had resigned the office of governor of New York and taken part in the ceremony by which he formally transferred that office to David B. Hill, the lieutenant governor, he began the difficult work of cabinet making. As he had rarely visited Washington and was without intimate acquaintance with any of the leading men of his party outside New York state, he felt that it was essential that he should have in his cabinet men who had been in close touch with public life, and especially the public life which concentrates at Washington.

For that reason Cleveland decided that it was imperative that he should choose a majority of his cabinet from the group of able Democratic senators in congress, and he sent, in the order named, for Thomas F. Bayard of Delaware, John G. Carlisle of Kentucky, L. Q. C. Lamar of Mississippi, Augustus H. Garland of Arkansas, and offered them, respectively, the posts of secretary of state, secretary of the treasury, secretary of the interior and attorney general.

Senators Bayard, Carlisle and Lamar gave almost instant acceptance to the invitations of the president-elect to enter his cabinet. But when the offer of the attorney generalship was made to Senator Garland Mr. Cleveland noticed that it was received hesitatingly and almost as though the former confederate senator and former governor of Arkansas was going to give a peremptory but courteous declination to enter the cabinet.

Now Mr. Cleveland had a very high regard for the ability and the character of Senator Garland, and he knew that the Arkansas was esteemed as able a lawyer as any that had sat in the senate chamber since the civil war, ranking in that respect with Senator Allen G. Thurman of Ohio, who had left the senate four years earlier, and with Senator George F. Edmunds of Vermont, who was to leave that body six years later. Therefore, when he noticed that Senator Garland hesitated to accept the cabinet post, Cleveland asked him point blank if he did not think he should be willing to forego his personal preference to remain in the senate in order that he might serve his country and his party to better advantage, perhaps, as attorney general.

"To that question," said the late Daniel Lamont, who told me the anecdote, having had it from Cleveland direct when he was that president's private secretary, "Senator Garland replied that he should esteem it a great honor to serve as attorney general, but that he ought not to accept the offer without a clear understanding on the part of Mr. Cleveland of one objection which he had to entering the cabinet."

"I am a student, absorbed in my duties as senator and in some professional work," said Senator Garland, "I am utterly unfitted by temperament and experience to take any part in the social life which is one of the characteristics deemed essential if a cabinet officer is to be successful. I do not attend public dinners and I give no dinners. To do that would cause me embarrassment."

"Judge Garland," said the governor—and he couldn't help smiling broadly—all that need give you no concern at all. It will be understood between us that your present manner of life is to be respected."

"When Senator Garland heard this cordial recognition of what he was afraid would be regarded as a defect that would bar him from cabinet association, he assured Mr. Cleveland that nothing would give him greater gratification than to enter the cabinet with that understanding."

Something Good In Sight

Simple Method by Which Lawyer's Long Harangue Was Brought to an End.

Alexander R. Smith, the secretary of the canal terminal commission, said to a New York friend:

"New York's foreign commerce has increased in the past year over $200,000,000. New York's success as a commercial center is, in fact, phenomenal—as phenomenal as the success of John Ballard's note."

"Ballard's brother, the judge, was once hearing a case where lawyer Lawless prosecuted. Lawyer Lawless was notorious for his longwindedness. He would sometimes speak for days and days. On this occasion he had been spouting forth his concluding argument for six hours, and the end was nowhere in sight, when Judge Ballard beckoned his brother John and whispered:

"Can't you stop him, Jack?"

"I'll stop him in two minutes," John

"Then I took it upon myself to call upon Senator Roscoe Conkling and lay before him all the circumstances connected with the appointment. 'Tell the postmaster for me,' said Conkling, when I had finished, 'that if the organization makes any trouble over the appointment he is to send the leaders to me.'

"A few days later the organization leaders marched into the senator's room in the Fifth Avenue hotel. He received them in a stately manner; and as soon as the manner of their reception would permit they declared in almost horror-stricken tones that the postmaster of New York had actually committed the unforgivable political crime of appointing a Democrat a messenger at his door, and with one voice they indignantly insisted that the old man be removed."

"Senator Conkling heard them through, then drew himself up in his imperious manner. 'Gentlemen,' he said—and his voice was as cold as steel—I have listened to the information you have brought to me. I have to say in reply that, had I been postmaster of New York, I would have felt that I had honored myself in making the appointment. If this is all that you have to say to me you had better retire to your respective homes."

"And they retired forthwith," ended Mr. Orton, with a smile.

WORK OF RED CROSS

Has Distributed $5,000,000 in Past Five Years.

During That Time Earthquake, Fire, Storms, Famine and Pestilence Have Produced Need—Relief Given in 33 Disasters.

Washington.—The purposes and responsibilities of the American Red Cross, according to its charter, are as follows:

"To furnish volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of armies in time of war," and to carry on a system of national and international relief in time of peace and apply the same in mitigating the sufferings caused by pestilence, famine, fire, floods, and other great national calamities, and to devise and carry on measures for preventing the same."

The Red Cross is governed by a Central committee of 18, of whom six are appointed by the president of the United States and 12 elected. This committee appoints a national director. Under the Central committee are state boards which are financial representatives in the collection and disbursement of relief funds in their respective states and chapters which are local groups of members.

Field work is divided into three classes and is assigned to three boards, the war relief board, the national relief board and the international relief board.

The war relief board at present conducts a department of first aid and a department of nursing. Miners, railroad men, sailors, workmen in great industrial establishments, police and firemen are taught the practical application of first aid to the injured. A car especially equipped carries lecturers to all parts of the country. Local physicians continue the instruction after the car passes on. Several thousand men are now receiving instruction in first aid in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Oklahoma, Iowa, Tennessee and other states. The Red Cross also supervises the first aid instruction given by those in charge of the seven mine rescue cars of the United States bureau of mines. In time of war the knowledge of first aid widely inculcated would bring into the volunteer armies many men well prepared for service in hospitals and in the care of wounded on the battle fields.

In the last two years these societies have participated effectively in Red Cross relief work following disasters in Key West, Fla.; Cherry, Ill.; Birmingham, Ala.; Drakeboro, Ky., and the forest fire region of Minnesota. Contributions made to sufferers in foreign countries are under the direction of the international relief board. Usually the American Red Cross is represented by the diplomatic or consular agents of the United States near the point of relief operations. Since 1905, the variety and extent of the relief work may be partly shown by the following table:

In the holiday season of 1907 the Red Cross desiring to forward anti-tuberculosis work, issued a Christmas stamp in the state of Delaware and the city of Philadelphia. The experiment was a success. In 1908 the movement was made national. The purpose is to contribute to the support of organized tuberculosis work already in operation. The net proceeds of sales are expended in the states and communities in which the sales are conducted. In 1908 the total sales of stamps amounted to about $150,000 and in 1909 about $240,000.

Rheumatism Advice

Gives Prominent Doctor's Best Prescription—Is Easily Mixed.

"Get one ounce of syrup of Sarsaparilla compound and one ounce of Toris compound. Then get half a pint of good whisky and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a tablespoonful of this mixture before each meal and at bed time. Shake the bottle before using. This is not new in this city as many of the worse cases of rheumatism and back-ache have been cured by it. Good results come the first day. Any druggist has these ingredients on hand or will quickly get them from his wholesale house. Any one can mix them."

Her Wedding March. A young girl who had never heard of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," but was familiar with the more popular parody on it, was a witness to a wedding ceremony in an uptown church recently. As the betrothed pair walked with dignified tread toward the altar to be wed and the organ pealed forth Mendelssohn's inspiring march, the young girl was plainly shocked. When she arrived at her home she told her mother of the ceremony and innocently exclaimed: "What do you think, mother, they played 'Gee Whiz! I'm Glad I'm Free.'"

Improvise in trifles never made a millionaire nor swelled a bank account.

Exhorting the Ducks. There are two tiny boys in this town whose mother sings often to them at their request, and as she is an ardent church woman, the children hear as many hymns as anything else. The other day they were playing with their wooden ducks in the bathtub, and strangely enough the ducks were more inclined to float sideways than in the approved manner. After several attempts to keep the misguided ducks straight the older boy shouted: "Stand up, duck, stand up." Then two-year-old, noting the familiar phrase, leaned over the tub and exhorted: "Tand up, duck! Tand up for Jesus!"

Seven Pensioners in One Family. Seven brothers and seven sisters living in Foulsham, England, and the adjacent parishes are receiving old age pensions. The oldest of the seven is eighty and the youngest seventy-one. Their united ages total 530 years. Their father was Philip Lambert, a carrier between Foulsham and Norwich who had a family of 11, all born in Foulsham and of whom 11 are now alive.

Snappy. "Ten cents' worth of canine pepper," said the little boy in the suburban store.

"Canine!" echoed the astonished clerk. "Why, my little man, I guess you mean cayenne pepper."

The little boy was doubtful. "Maybe I do, mister," he hesitated. "But mamma said it was the kind of pepper that had a sharp bite, so I thought it was 'canine.'"

From the time the girl begins to menstruate until menstruation ceases she has always vastly better prospects of coming through healthily if she watches her bowel movements. A Helpless Invalid

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A woman who is sick and suffering, and won't at least try a medicine which has the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is, it would almost seem, to blame for her own wretchedness. Read what this woman says:

Richmond, Mo.—"When my second daughter was eighteen months old I was pronounced a hopeless invalid by specialists. I had a consultation of doctors and they said I had a severe case of ulceration. I was in bed for ten weeks, had sinking spells, and was pronounced to be in a dangerous condition. My father insisted that we try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and brought me six bottles. I soon began to improve, and before it had all been taken I was as well and strong as ever—my friends hardly recognized me so great was the change."—Mrs. Woodson Branstetter, Richmond, Mo.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read what another woman says:— Jonesboro, Texas.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for myself and daughter, and consider it unequalled for all female diseases. I would not be without it for anything. I wish every mother in America could be persuaded to use it as there would be less suffering among our sex then. I am always glad to speak a word of praise for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and you are at liberty to use this testimonial."—Mrs. James T. Lawrence, Jonesboro, Texas.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering from the same trouble?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

If the slightest trouble appears which you do not understand, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for her advice—it is free and always helpful.
