Little Detroit Shortstop Is Great Admirer of Girls and Boys-Also

Fond of Animals. Owen Bush, one of the most aggressive ball players in the world, and a man who fights for everything when he is on the field, sparing neither umpire nor opponents if he thinks some one is trying to hand him the worst of it, is as mild as a kitten when he has a chance to play with children. The little shortstop has a mania for amusing himself with the youngsters, and will spend hours talking to little boys and girls whenever the chance offers itself.

Bush's idea of a real happy day is to be permitted to mind a brood of youngsters for several hours. He likes nothing better than to visit the married men of the Detroit ball club and spend his time talking to the kids. If there are children in the house, the grown-ups need expect nothing of Mr. Bush. Beyond the usual salutations, he contributes nothing to the galety of the adult circles, resenting it if anyone other than a child makes demands on his time. It is a matter of record that Bush once spent four hours of a visit to a fellow ball player amusing a child, without so much as speaking to anyone else present. Fans who might have gathered the idea from watching Donie on the field that his favorite recreations are murder and assault and battery therefore will have to form a new opinion of the energetic and scrappy player. Next to children, Ownie likes animals. Anyone who abuses a dog or horse when he is present is likely to encounter a variety of trouble, for the Indianapolis boy has the courage of his convictions and will stand up for
