Intervention of the United States government to secure justice, or at least a fair trial for fallen President Madero of Mexico, as announced by Secretary Knox at the cabinet meeting was an unexpected development of the State department policy in regard to that republic. Extravagance in the present system of improving waterways and the need of closer co-operation between the states and the federal government were emphasized in the senate in a fight over certain provisions of the annual river and harbor appropriation bill. MADERO SHOT DOWN

PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT KILLED ON WAY TO PRISON.

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 24.—Francisco I. Madero and Jose Pino Suarez are dead.

In a midnight ride under guard from the National palace to the penitentiary they were killed.

The circumstances surrounding the death of the deposed president and vice president of the republic are unknown, except as given in official accounts, which do not conform in all cases. The only witnesses were those actually concerned in the killing.

The provisional president, General Victoriano Huerta, says the killing of the two men was incidental to a fight between their guard and a party attempting to liberate them. The minister of foreign relations, Francisco de la Barra, adds that the prisoners attempted to escape. Neither makes a definite statement as to which side fired the fatal shots. It is not impossible that neither knows.

An official investigation has been ordered to determine the responsibility, and solemn promises have been made that the guilty will be punished.

Not unnaturally a great portion of the public regards the official versions with doubt, having in mind the use for centuries of the notorious "ley fuga," the unwritten law which is invoked when the death of a prisoner is desired. After its application here is written on the records, "Prisoner shot trying to escape."

Senora Madero, widow of the ex-president, received the first definite information of his death from the Spanish minister, Senor Cologan y Cologan. She already had heard reports that something unusual and serious had happened, but friends had endeavored up to that time to prevent her from learning the whole truth.

Soon afterward, accompanied by his brother, Jose Perez, and Mercedes Madero, a sister of Francisco, Senora Madero drove to the penitentiary, but was refused permission to see the body of her husband.

The tragedy occurred shortly after midnight. Madero and Suarez, who had been prisoners in the national palace since their arrest on Tuesday last, were accompanied by another car and escorted by 100 rurales, under the orders of Commandant Francisco Cardenas and Colonel Rafael Pimiento.

PRISON LABOR BILL

SENATE APPROVES MEASURE INTRODUCED BY DODGE.

TO BENEFIT STATE AND MEN

Bill Proposes That State Employ Prisoners to Make Furniture, Shoes, Etc.

The Dodge bill to provide that inmates of the state prison and proposed state reformatory be employed to make furniture, clothing, shoes, etc., for state institutions, be worked on country roads, and that part of their wages be paid their dependant families, has been approved by the senate.

The employment of the men was left to the new board of control, who will have full direction of the work.

The object of the bill is to abolish the present system of prison contract labor and substitute a method by which the state will receive direct benefit from the men's work and the men themselves will be benefited.

At present men are hired by the prison contractors for 55 cents per day per man, less than it costs the state to keep them. In consequence prison made goods can be sold for less than those made in free establishments.

Fourth Story for State House.

Want Settlement Now.

They fear that if the proposition of the Lincoln city council is accepted someone will enjoy the levy of the tax, and thus the matter will be held up in the courts for months and may be too late to do anything about it.

In the meantime with things unsettled, it will be doubtful if the legislature will provide for any more buildings on present site

ELECTION DAY IN FRANCE

Republic Chooses Versailles as City in Which Presidents Are Named—Executives All Have Doubles.

VERSAILLES, France.—The day of the presidential election revived some of the old glories of Versailles. Louis XIV., as we know, selected Versailles in preference to St. Germain as his abode. He, in fact, created it. It was in the course of a hunting party that he was fascinated by the beautiful surroundings and the wooded country of Versailles, and immediately afterwards joined and formed the nucleus of the chateau. For nearly a century Versailles was abandoned, and it was the Republic which restored some of its prestige. First of all the senate and chamber met there regularly till 1874, and then the Constitution provided that even after the removal of the parliament to Paris the election of the president of the republic should always take place at Versailles. The great event of January 17 being political, Versailles lacked some of the gay and fashionable elements to which such an occasion might lend itself. President Fallieres may or may not regret his disappearance from the Elysee. But there is one man who does. The good ex-president has a double in Paris, who for years has basked in a subtly reflected glory. He realized early—friends rushed to tell him—in the career of the new president that he would be constantly taken for the head of the state, and, being a humorist and genial person withal, he prepared himself for his fate. When any one bowed to him respectfully he returned a sweeping "coup de chapeau" and smiled an ample Fallieres smile. He even wore a hat such as the worthy president affected, and a spotted butterfly tie. These things reassured many people who were at first inclined to doubt whether it really was the president after all.

Every French president, they say, has his double, and for some one the honor which has been withdrawn from the double of M. Fallieres will be bestowed upon some one as yet perhaps all ignorant of the greatness thrust upon him. Let us hope he will take it in the same gracious spirit that has characterized M. Fallieres' double. That complaisant personage will not be shorn of all his glory. He will still shine with a modified luster as the double of an ex-president.

WHY CAT HAS NINE LIVES

Has Ceased to Be a Question to This Official Cat and Dog Executioner.

New London, Conn.—Why a cat has nine lives ceases to be a question. The presence of electricity explains it.

This important contribution to scientific knowledge is made by Herbert A. Dean of Providence, who holds the delightful job of official cat and dog executioner in Providence and New London.

He has cut short the careers of numerous dogs here by asphyxiation in a large tank. None of them gave Dean a bit of trouble.

Several months ago he placed a cat in the gas tank and turned on the fumes. Within a few minutes the tank exploded, almost consigning Dean and his assistant, Earl Brown, to the fate decided on for the cat.

Dean thought that was just an ordinary accident, but the other day when a second cat was tossed in to the tank, the death chamber blew up again. Brown was slightly injured and Dean's hair was singed. What remains of the tank will never form a topic of conversation.

Dean, seeking an explanation, went to the office of the New London Gas and Electric Company and told his story. One of the officials laughed and said that when a cat is thrown in to the tank the feline arches its back and by rubbing the same against the side of the tank generates so much electricity that an explosion is inevitable.

The gas expert said that this was so because one of his engineers who had looked into the thing said it was so.

Minneapolis.—The limit of a husband's stinginess was brought out in a divorce case in District court here. The plaintiff was on the witness stand, when she made the statement that her husband had never contributed to her support.

"Didn't your husband ever give you any money?" asked the court.

"Well, he did give me a dollar soon after we were married, eight years ago," answered the witness. "but shortly afterward he insisted upon my returning it. Then he deserted me."

The divorce was granted.
