> Oliver Brodock and the Rutherford family had an experience with their their autos on the way home from Loup City Sunday evening that they don't care to repeat right away. The rain was only light at Loup City and they thought they could get home easy, but as they went south toward their homes the rain increased until all the draws were small rivers. At Fred Daddow's, the big draw at that place was carrying a heavy load, as it always does in a heavy rain. Oliver in was getting too near home to let anything stop him and drove his auto it and the car died righ in the center of the stream, with the water

F.M. Michow cut the weeds along rushing all around it. The Rutherford car saw Oliver's trouble but drove in, through and safely across They then borrowed a rope at Daddow's and either waded or swam out to Oliver, fastened the rope to the car and without much trouble he was hauled out of the flood. This all happened about 11 o'clock Sunday night. They were delayed about forty minney, reaching home about one o'clock in the morning, a tired out bunch.
