The U. P. "corn special" that was to be here Saturday afternoon, failed to show up. There were perhaps an hundred people, largely farmers, assembled at the depot at the schedule time, when the following telegram was received by agent Hiser, which explains itself: "On account of corn special being so much time going to Pleasanton and getting late on schedule, they have decided not to go to Loup City this trip. Please notify all interested."

The Burlington will run another special over its lines, this time covering the northwest and southwest territory of the state. The train leaves Lincoln on the night of March 22nd and runs to Burwell, where the first lecture will be given. Points along the north division will be visited and then the route will be along the Alliance division. The value of these lectures is everywhere admitted and are very well attended by the farmer folks.

We are not going to tell on a couple of our local sportsmen who were out hunting last week and were found by the marshal with a goodly quantity of game on hand, nor how the marshal made them divy some of the choicest on the hypothesis that the law had been violated, nor the vow of vengeance of the hunters on the biased officer, when they came to a realization that they had been worked. Why did we not play marshal instead and get the results of the joke?

A New Book of Proverbs:

- Hear! for of important things will I speak; and the opening of my lips shall be of what is technically known as straight goods.
- Clothes were created to cover the nakedness of man, and to adorn him.
- If thou wouldst but cover thy nakedness, get thee a broad-bosomed barrel; it will suffice for thy need;
- But if thou wouldst be adorned, come thou now to Gasteyer's store, and thy good looks shall be increased an hundred fold; yea, and even the eccentricities of thy form shall be covered up by clothes judiciously constructed.
- The commencement of wisdom is the desire to be well dressed.
- As vinegar is to the teeth, and as smoke is to the eyes, so is a $7.77 suit of clothes to him that knoweth.
- The wearer thereof shall surely become a dead one, socially, unless he possesseth much riches; in which case he can afford to wear whatsoever he blame pleaseeth;
- But he that hath but a moderate income of gold and currency must be attired according to the fashion of his time, or, verily, will he lose out.
- A wise dresser becometh so by the counsel of his tailor.
- He that watcheth his apparel, guardeth his prosperity; for a man maketh an impression according to the amount of front he putteth up;
- For, verily, it causeth him to stand upright in the presence of his fellows, with inflated chest and squared shoulders;
- To take mighty steps, when walking about town, so that he cometh into contact with high places thereof.
