County Institute.
The annual session of the Sherman County Teachers' Institute is being held this week in the high school building. The institute is by far the largest in the history of the county, and every period of every day has been filled with something of value to the teachers. The teachers have been prompt in attendance and they have shown the keenest interest in every session. Supt. Hendrickson is receiving congratulations on every hand over the success of the session, and the teachers are outspoken in praise of the management and work offered, bringing to the teachers the largest professional advantages, and professional work of a high grade is being done
Work began promptly at 8:30 Monday morning with the assembly room almost entirely filled. Supt. R. M. Thomson of Ravenna has had charge of the work in music, history, civics and arithmetic. He has done some excellent, practical work and the teachers express themselves in most appreciative terms of his work. Mr. Thomson is an educator of rare ability and his work has the true ring to it.
Mrs. Geislar of Ord conducts the model school each forenoon. About a dozen little children who have never been to school come each morning and form a model class in reading and numbers. Mrs. Geislar has a very happy way of teaching the little ones and her work has been an inspiration to all the teachers. Beginners in particular have received invaluable help. Mr. Hendrickson has received many favorable comments upon the model school, and he certainly deserves credit for bringing such practical work to the teachers of this county.
Prof. J. W. Seanson of the Peru State Normal, instructs the classes in pedagogy, reading and geography, and conducts the beginners' round table. No educator in the state is better known than Mr. Seanson, and the services of none are in greater demand. Prof. Seanson combines in the fullest measure all the qualities that constitute an able, forceful and popular institute instructor and lecturer, and his work teams with good things every minute.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

Life of Grandma Long.

George Herbert said that one good mother was worth a hundred school-masters. It must have been a sweet natured mother like the one in this sketch to have inspired the assertion.
Deep hidden behind every personality is an individual power. In this lies a woman's real strength, and in securing data for this biography I have tried to trace the source of this power in the subject of this imperfect sketch.

Catherine Hamilton Reid was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, Nov. 17th, 1819, and boasts descent from the Irish "Hamiltons" spoken of in "The Conqueror."
The Celtic strain may have been responsible in a measure for a lively temperament, and even to late in middle life her youthful joys and follies were lived over again in memory to the delight of her children. In 1844 she married Edward Long, and in 1856 they emigrated to Page county, Iowa, where they homesteaded government land near College Springs. Her husband was one of the founders and first trustees of College Springs College, now considered one of the best small colleges in that state. Later they moved to Clarinda, the county seat. She speaks of an odd coincidence on coming to this town. At the corner of the square in this town was a public well where incoming emigrants could draw water for domestic use. While going the first morning for a pitcher of water, she met a pleasant woman, a resident of the place, and they chatted in a friendly manner as strangers do in the west. The local resident said "My name is Catherine Reid, and yours? Catherine Long." "You bear my maiden name of Catherine Reid," said Mother Long and to her astonishment the other lady replied: "Well, how strange, my maiden name was Catherine Long, and married name Catherine Reid." "We seem to have exchanged personalities. And the two women by virtue of the chance meeting sent friendly greetings for many years.
She was the mother of seven children. Her husband died when her youngest child, a son, was about one year old. They were living on a farm and she had not time to abandon herself to grief, for as she gathered the little group of four fatherless children around her, she realized that henceforth her mission was to train and educate her children to fill honorable positions in life, and as everything depended on her own efforts, everything must be subordinated to this labor of love. Her children often live over again in mind those years for mother and testify to her intense devotion, remarkable family government, training in moral precept, line upon line. If her sons and daughters are not doing their part in the world, it is not the dear mother's fault. The strength of her character was shown in her power of command, even temper and sweet nature that accepted what life brings as being for the best.
In speaking of her early life, Mother Long said: "We lived more simply because we had to; did more work because we were willing to, and took more exercise because we liked to," which may account for the long life of the grandmothers.
She has been a wide reader, interested in public affairs. She was in her prime during the most dramatic period of American history, and remembers the impression made by the vivid oratory of such men as Fred Douglas, Wendell Phillips, etc. Her facilities have kept their tone in a remarkable way, for one of her age, and freedom from worry has had much to do with it.
Joe Jefferson said: "They tell me life always becomes to the old as an empty theatre, its lights extinguished, music silent and actors gone, and they sit musing on the scenes that once have been." But he concludes, "it need not be so, if you keep yourself a part of the world life and in harness to the end," and Mother Long adds, "and cultivate interest and sympathy in the joys and sorrows of those around us."

And this last is the secret of the individual power or strength which you feel in the presence of this dear aged mother.
I make no apology for these biographies, and if you find one thought in any of them that will make the thought of old age more tolerable in connection with yourself, then the compiling of them will not have been in vain.

This section was visited by the greatest downpour of rain, Tuesday evening that has visited this part of the country since 1896, according to those who have lived here since that time. The rain commenced at 5:35 in the evening and lasted without cessation for perhaps an hour and a quarter, turning the streets into veritable lakes, filling cellars and giving in that short space of time some 5 60-100 inches according to the government gauge. The rain came down through Washington township, but not touching to much extent in the neighborhood of Arcadia, and reaching down to Ravenna on the east, and to Boelus and St. Paul on the south, which latter town got five inches. The U. P. got the benefit of several washouts, delaying trains on the branch yesterday, but the Burlington escaped any trouble. The big irrigation ditch north of town, filled and came down like a torrent, J. W. Long getting an overflow from the ditch at his place, which flooded his barn and we understand destroyed some fifty bushels of wheat lately threshed.

A. B. Outhouse went to Omaha last Tuesday.
Miss Anna Thompson left for Lone Cabin, Wyoming, Tuesday morning, where we understand she will remain.

Hymeneal.

Last Sunday, July 30th, at high noon at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Hedges, occurred the marriage of Miss Mary Hedges to Arthur C. Ogle, Judge Hunter officiating, and only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties being present. As the march rendered by Mrs. Cook, a sister of the bride, pealed forth, the bride and groom entered the parlor, supported by Miss Jesse Ogle and Mr. Harley Hedges. The bride was dressed in pale blue and white and carried a bouquet of white flowers. The groom wore the conventional black. After the ceremony a sumptuous dinner of three courses was served. The groom is one of our most industrious young farmers and is well known, while his fair bride has only resided in our midst a couple of years. Where they will settle is undecided, but wherever they may cast their lot, we trust prosperity will be their portion.

While repairing his engine, Monday morning, Engineer O'Bryan was badly scalded across the shoulders and arms by the blowing out of a steam cock. Luckily he turned his head just at the time, escaping the hot steam in his face. He was able to go out on his trip however.
