I had much pleasure in looking over containing in their pasted clippings an epitome of contemporaneous history.

In later years her grandchildren will say, in looking up reference to some national historical event: "You will find it in Grandma's scrap-book," and they will prove a treasure trove to the student and a legacy worth the keeping to her descendants.

This aged mother has had her share of troubles, but she locks them in her own consciousness and ever turns a smiling face to the world, and to the future, and the memories of bygone years that grieve and depress, are buried in the gulf of days that lengthen their span behind her and she tures her face resolutely toward the sunset. where are garnered the rewards of a lifetime of effort.
