MAY 3, 1915.

Nearly two hundred Juniors and Seniors were interested enough in the experiment of an inter-class breakfast to arise early enough to catch a 7:30 car for the State Farm Saturday morning. The Juniors provided a breakfast that could not fail to satisfy even the discriminating Seniors. It was pleasant morning lark and everyone seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion. This affair deserves to become an annual event.

ON TIME

The appearance of the 1915 Year Book on time comes as a pleasant surprise to most students. In former years the management each time promised the book for May 1st or May 15th and there was usually a month of postponed promises and the book distributed but a few days before the close of the school. But this year true to their word the editors and managers have given us the book on time. This achievement is worthy of considerable mention for it required much extra time and effort.

SUNDAY THEATRES

University students seem to be more or less indifferent about the question of Sunday theatres. It is most certain that they have shown no disposition to indorse the idea. The average student has his time so occupied now that the prospect of having still more places to go can scarcely interest him.

But there are some fundamental points involved in this the solution of this question that we as citizens ought to consider. Aside from the moral and religious side of the question which we must admit is worthy of consideration there is the danger in this step of moving in the direction of state of society that will not recognize the value of one day's rest in seven. From a purely commercial standpoint anyone knows that a week with one day of rest is the most effective. The adoption of this proposal may not materially affect the most of us directly, but we need consider the position of many people to whom the adoption would mean seven days work in every week instead of six. More than that it is the first step of the liberal element in their movement for an "open" town which would vitally affect all of us. University men who are voters in Lincoln should consider the welfare of society in general in passing upon this question tomorrow.

THE FORUM

To the Editor Daily Nebraskan:

Whereas, in past years the students have taken very slight interest in Ivy Day, there is a feeling on the part of the faculty that it is a useless holiday and ought to be abolished. If, however, the students will show through the interest they take in it that they appreciate Ivy Day as a Nebraska institution, and will do their best to make it an unqualified success, the faculty will second them in the efforts, for the University of Nebraska is especially lacking in anything which gives college spirit. It thus remains for the students to indicate whether they wish Ivy Day to be continued or discontinued. Sincerely,
CARL C. ENGBERG.

Editor Daily Nebraskan:

We were certainly astounded by Mr. Hill's curt refusal to answer Mr. Kyle's question. The question was a fair one, put in a fair manner, and deserving a fair answer. Mr. Hill defends himself—or rather evades the question altogether in a most inglorious manner—with the comical plea that his article was "clear." Sad to say, unsound ideas have far too often won support by being expounded in a "clear" manner. It is not a question of clearness at all. It is a question of right or wrong. One does not have to agree with Mr. Kyle in order to take such a position.

Of course it was very apparent that Mr. Kyle's question was a very pertinent one. If "these acts of saluting" or "standing" are indications of patriotism and things for good, there is absolutely no reason why they should be discontinued after the army and navy are abolished. If, on the other hand, "these acts of saluting" or "standing" are indications of patriotism and things for the good" only while the army and navy exist, their "good" is certainly only of ephemeral value, a mere tribute to pomp and splendor, and not an indication of true patriotism as Mr. Hill in his first article contended. The fallacy in Mr. Hill's first article seems to have been fairly well exposed.

If Mr. Hill could not answer he should at least have admitted that much. Let he clings tenaciously to his argument despite the fact that its fallacy has been exposed. All he is doing in effect is clinging to the wreckage of his shattered bark, with the excuse that since it is his, he is going to hang on even if he has to go down, altogether unmindful of the fact that he knows his position is untenable. It is not exactly right that he should go down with his ship out of sheer love for it as long as Mr. Kyle is standing by valiantly, ready to offer aid.

Mr. Hill closes with this bit of philosophy. "However, we might mention the fact that sometimes the truth hurts like everything." Yes indeed! Perhaps that is why he failed to answer. He first refuses to answer a question which was raised to determine the "truth" of his argument. Then in this rather philosophical manner he suddenly declares, by way of intimation, that his argument is the "truth," hinting that the occasion of his article is one of those times when the word "sometimes" is applicable. We have absolutely no objection to Mr. Hill becoming a philosopher. Oh no, go ahead! All that we ask is that Mr. Hill square his evasive conduct with a study so profound as philosophy, if for nothing else, at least to avoid the appearance of the ludicrous.

The question is yet unanswered.

Opportunity, undismayed, still knocks at his door. What is Mr. Hill going to do about it?

ANTON H. JENSEN, '19.
