USING THE PARING KNIFE

The legislature yesterday killed certain of the recommendations of the board of regents for appropriations for the State University, among them an item of $200,000 for an increase in salaries of the faculty members. Other plans for expansion of the University will have to be altered because of trimming in the general appropriation bill, the "economy" program seeming to be most popular with the state lawmakers at present.

Very probable it is that the faculty should have the increase in salary, and that the other recommendations of the regents for appropriations if adopted would do much toward making this a better school. The legislators, however, are probably thinking of the people back home who appreciate no showing quite so much as that which appears a saving of the dollar, and it is not hard to account for the trimming of the appropriation bill when this is remembered. A cut must be made somewhere, and the University has to stand its share of the saving.

The University of Minnesota has recently gone through a similar experience. A Minneapolis daily newspaper recently printed an indictment of the legislature for not granting salary increases, and listed seventeen strong faculty men who went to other schools for higher pay. Among them was Dean Woods of the college of agriculture, a former Nebraskan. Nebraska is not the only school whose wishes in the appropriation bills have been doomed to some measure of disappointment.

The regents propose, but the legislature disposes. Both are acting from conscientious motives. It seems unfortunate that the University cannot get all its friends desire. It will, however, continue to grow and prosper.

WHAT DO YOU TALK ABOUT?

Perhaps because of the doses of higher education and "heavy" things the student gets in his classes each day, he has a tendency, in the relief of the association with his fellow outside of the class room, to seek in chaff and light gossip, a mental relaxation, and, to use a phrase in common parlance, he is wont to talk a lot without saying anything. Table talk at boarding houses is very apt to be concerned principally with sharp-edged personalities or the state of the weather.

One can get a great deal of pleasure out of an intimate friendship if he can find time for an interchange of virile ideas which will lead to new and interesting fields of thought. Often it may behoove one to play the listener. Both the speaker and the receiver of the new thought can get a lot of good out of ten or fifteen minutes of serious discussion of the things that man in his spiritual nature is most interested in.

A few years ago a game used to be played at parties, where for five minutes one talked on a given subject with one partner, and then, when the bell rang, found another partner and talked on something else. It might be a profitable thing to revive this old pastime, and ring a bell now and then on certain lines of conversation, carrying it for a given space of time into deeper channels.

The students at Nebraska are studying everything from under the sun, almost, but seem to have a certain shyness in ever revealing in anything they say that they have thoughts beyond the next party date.

THE SPRING STYLES

The windows downtown are full of them now, brilliantly colored, joyously prophetic—spring hats and suits. The fair ones are not alone in the revels of window shopping, for the new hats and ties and shirts of the men are occupying a place in the public vision as prominent as the suits and hats and waists of the women.

A good indicator of the temperament of the average man or woman is the extent with which he lets his enthusiasm over the new modes get the better of his judgment and calmer reason.

Student Council At Penn. State Has Class And College Representatives

In reply to the editorial for suggestions on student government the following description of the student government as organized at the Pennsylvania state college is submitted:

The student council of Penn State is made up on a class basis, the class officers being elected for a period of one year to insure more permanency, greater stability, greater efficiency in their duties, and greater class spirit; consequently greater college spirit. The members of this student council are elected by their classes and the number is apportioned in direct ratio to the number of students enrolled in the different colleges.

The senior representation consists of the senior class president who acts as the chairman of the student council, six men elected from the agricultural college, six men from the college of engineering, one from the liberal arts college, one from the college of mines and metallurgy, and one from the college of natural science.

The junior representation consists of the junior class president, three men from the agricultural college, three from the college of engineering, one from the college of liberal arts, one from the college of mines, and one from the college of natural science.

The sophomore representation consists of the sophomore class president, and a member elected at large from their class.

The freshman representation consists of their class president.

The council passes on all questions affecting student government, originates and assists in the execution of college customs and refers the more important steps to the two upper classes for ratification.

The student board consists of members of the student council elected by that body according to class. Only the three upper classes are represented in this. It is the duty of this body to discuss minor questions relative to student government which are later presented to the student council. In addition this body tries all cases of infringement on the honor system and recommends suspension or expulsion.

The student tribunal is a body consisting of three seniors, four juniors, and five sophomores which tries all cases of infringement of college rules and customs and interprets all college customs.

These bodies as described act as a medium between the few matters of concern to the faculty, and the more powerful board of trustees (regents here). To all intents and purposes it has made greater college spirit for which Penn State is known in the east, greater democracy, and a more well balanced action.
