Russian Government Asks Return of Native Students

The agricultural commissioner of the Russian government has issued a call to all Russian students of agriculture who have received their education in America. The government urges the return of all these men to the fatherland at the earliest moment, to take part in the great drive being made in scientific agriculture.

Following is a letter sent out to all Russian agriculture specialists by the Russian agricultural commission in the United States:
 Gentlemen:

"Anticipating a tremendous need for the scientific agricultural workers in the nearest future and being aware of the fact that some Russian young men who, owing to various reasons, could not receive agricultural education in their fatherland, but succeeded to obtain the same in the United States, where they are also working at the present, the department of agriculture desires to attract them back to Russia to work for the benefit of Russian agriculture.

The return to Russia of agricultural specialists, especially entomologists, phytologists, plant breeders, animal breeders, etc., to work for their fatherland, is very desirable. Agricultural specialists are hereby invited to forward to the agricultural agency to the United States, 1313 Flatiron building, New York City, data concerning their educational qualifications, references from professors, and scientific work, which material will be forwarded to the department of agriculture for consideration.
 W. ANDERSON.

MANY UPPERCLASSMEN JOIN THE R. O. T. C.

About 50 junior and senior men enrolled, during the first four days, in the reserve officers' training corps which has just been established at the University of Michigan, and it is expected that the corps will begin work with a large roll. As many of the men will soon be subject to draft, they are entering the R. O. T. C. so that they may be officers when they are called.

All freshmen and sophomore men are enrolling in the corps because they are required to take two years of military drill and, by enrolling in the corps, they secure their uniforms from the government, according to instructions from the war department. The freshmen and sophomore companies are so large that four battalions will probably be organized in each of the two university regiments.

Upperclassmen who enroll in the corps will receive their uniforms and about $100 a year from the government. On completion of the course they will receive commissions as reserve officers. College credit is granted for the special military work in the course.

MEASURES TAKEN TO MEET YEAR'S HARVEST PROBLEM

ial lines of service in war times. To close the school would shut off the supply of army officers, physicians, engineers, and civilian assistants of many types. In the latter class, if the war continues long, there will be many young women from the towns and cities of the state who could be of little immediate use to the farmers in crop conservation and production.

"Obviously the University cannot continue indefinitely, as it did to some extent last spring, in giving credits in unearned subjects no matter how industrious and patriotic the students may be. If the engineer does not have mathematical knowledge, the military bridge may fall down. If the surgeon has not accurately studied bacteriology, the wound may become infected. If the pharmacist does not know toxicology, the prescription may be deadly. The University cannot give unearned credit even in war times.

Will Grant Furlough

We can and will, however, grant to any student who is willing to leave the University to engage in crop conservation or production a furlough from his studies. With a leave of absence duly certified in advance, the student may return without prejudice. The University through its Extension department will provide for such studies in absence as the student may be able to carry and on his return appoint official coaches, without cost, to aid him in making up his work, especially during evening hours and holidays. Where a number of students of the same class are absent, special coaching classes will be organized. Individual instruction will be provided for. Thus, for instance, if twenty-five students are behind in their French for six weeks during cornhusking time, several hours a day drill by a competent teacher during the Christmas holidays would probably bring them up to standard. The same would be true of other subjects.

"With the consent of the head of the department, the official coaches will have authority to give a passing war grade to any students who have been absent for industrial service whenever in the judgment of the coaches the student knows enough about the subject for his future practical work or to pursue his later courses successfully.
 "Any student wishing to withdraw from the University at any time under this system of furloughs register with Dean Engberg. No student dropping out without formal permission and returning later will receive any help in making up back work under these provisions.

 "S. AVERY."

AT THE ORPHEUM TODAY

Charles Rogers in the presentation of his act "The Movie Man" gives some inside "dope" as to the construction of moving pictures, the troubles, and comedy side as well as the sort of work done. The entire time used is crowded with laughs for all who witness the performance. Charles Rogers has shown true sagacity in surrounding himself with such capable people as Irene Bell, who takes the part of the heroine and James P. Houston, playing the part of the director.

Laypo and Benjamin show extraordinary ability by singing and injecting good, clean comedy throughout the number, which is put over in a thorough and artistic manner. They certainly bear out their billing, "Somewhat Different Comedians," deviating entirely from the usual run of acrobatic acts and showing versatility rarely displayed but always in demand. The act is replete with comedy lines, the kind that are designated real gloom dispellers.

Lew Wells, a neat appearing man in the prime of life locks to be a prominent business man pleased with the world, is the celebrated and much sought after story teller, monologist and king of saxophonists. Lew is presenting this season a monologue teeming with laughs. His prehistoric stories he has added to and his impressions of the present world war, the slakers, pacifists and other long haired gentlemen who want peace as well as short haired ladies who want votes all receive their just due from this inimitable comedian during his monologue.

William A. Hanlon, son of George Hanlon of Hanlons "Superba" and "Fantasma" played leading clown in these productions for many seasons. After many offers for a vaudeville appearance, Mr. Hanlon accepted arranging to produce the trick pantomimic novelty "The Railroad Hotel," which contains many of the most successful features and tricks of the famed productions of his father. Many new ideas original with Mr. Hanlon are also contained in the present act. Mr. Hanlon's present offering was built solely to entertain. That it accomplishes its purpose is quite evident. The funny situations and tricks make the act one big enjoyable laugh. A company of four people constitute the cast, all competent and selected for their ability. It is a most wonderful number and wonderfully presented.—Adv.
