MILITARY NEWS

Electrical Branch, U. S. Navy
The electrical branch of the U. S. navy is divided into two parts—general electricity, and radio (or wireless). Applicants for enlistment in this branch are enlisted as landsman for electrician (either general or radio), and are detailed for a course of instruction at one of the navy electrical schools, either at the navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., or at the navy yard, Mare Island, Cal. The pay of a landsman for electrician while under instruction is $17.60 per month, in addition to which he is furnished a complete outfit, uniform, meals, lodging, textbooks, tools, and material with which to work.

Electricians—General
Applicants for enlistment as landsman for electrician (general) must be electricians by trade, must know the names and uses of the various parts of the dynamo and dynamo engine, must be familiar with the ordinary types of switch boards and methods of wiring, must be able to write legibly and understand elementary arithmetic, must be between the ages of 18 and 25, and must pass the same careful physical examination required of all other recruits.

Radio Operators
Competent operators of the Morse telegraphic code, or men with a sufficient foundation in radio telegraphy may be enlisted as landsman for electrician (radio). The applicant must be able to take dictation at a speed of 25 words a minute, and pass a creditable examination in spelling and penmanship. The problems in arithmetic will include multiplication, division, simple proportion, percentage and square root. Testimonials as to good character and skill as an operator must be presented, either from employers, or from the principal of a trade school where the applicant has been a student in telegraphy or radio. The applicant must be able to receive 20 words per minute.

Upon satisfactory completion of the course of instruction at the electrical school (which lasts about six months) recruits in this branch are rated electrician third class (general or radio), and if their conduct warrants, they are allowed a leave of absence before being assigned to duty. Electricians (general) will probably be detailed on board ship, and radio operators will be assigned to radio duty, either on board ship or at a radio station ashore. The pay of electricians, both general and radio, after leaving the school is as follows: Electrician third class, $33 per month; electrician second class $44 per month; electrician first class $55 per month; chief electrician (acting appointment) $66; permanent appointment $77 per month. This pay is increased with each re-enlistment, as described in the blue pamphlet. The physical and moral qualifications prescribed for entrance to the naval service apply in all respects to this branch.

If the recruit is unable to complete the course of instruction at the electrical school because of incompetency or inaptitude, he will either be transferred to such rating in general service as he is qualified to fill, or he will be discharged from the navy for inaptitude.
