

MANY ENTRIES FOR MAT MEET

Eighty-three Men, from Seven Schools, to Participate in Valley Contest Here.

PRELIMINARIES TO BE HELD ON FRIDAY

Eighty-three wrestlers from seven leading schools of the Missouri Valley conference have been entered for the Missouri Valley conference meet to be held at the Armory Friday and Saturday, March 13 and 14. Five of the schools, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa State, and Oklahoma A. and M. will be represented in all seven events.

The preliminary bouts of the meet will start on the Armory floor at 3 p. m. Friday. Semi-finals will start the same evening at 8:00. Preliminary third place matches will be held Saturday morning at 9:00. Finals will be at 2:30 Saturday afternoon. The conference meet will be the next to the last appearance of the Nebraska wrestling team this year. The Western Intercollegiate meet at St. Paul will be the last on the Husker schedule. Nebraska failed to win much glory this year in the dual meets on the schedule, and the Husker wrestlers will have their last chances at letters in the coming two conference meets.

Huskies Crippled.

Last year, Nebraska wrestlers distinguished themselves in the conference meets after mediocre showing in dual matches, and followers of the Nebraska team are expecting something of the same sort this year. The team has been crippled all year, though, by injuries and ineligibilities. The last injury was to Capt. Dale Skinner, and kept him out of the meet last Saturday with Northwestern, and may also keep him out of the Valley meet this week.

Blore and Highley are the only Nebraska men of those who are sure to be in Friday who were on the team last year. Among the other entries, Lundy is about the most experienced man on the squad. He was on the squad last year but was not eligible for varsity. The loss of Kellogg, by ineligibility, early in the season, will be felt by Nebraska in the meet Friday and Saturday.

Nebraska Entries Uncertain.

The Husker entries in the different weights have not yet been definitely decided upon, but will in all probability be the same as in the last several dual meets.

Student athletic tickets will not admit to the conference meet, Coach R. G. Clapp stated yesterday. General tickets for all matches can be procured for one dollar. Single admission to the preliminaries will be fifty cents. Semi-finals will also be fifty cents. Tickets for the final matches will be seventy-five cents. The entry list yesterday was:

OLYMPIAN STUFF

Life around the campus as seen from the Mountain of the Gods.

PROMINENT FACULTY MEMBERS BLACKLISTED

Faculty members of the University of Nebraska held an unchaperoned mixed party in the art gallery of the Library late Saturday night. Operator 38, Olympian investigator, is preparing a report of these wild parties, since it is understood they are a regular occurrence. Investigation showed that the party had not been registered at the office of the dean of women. It is expected that the Student Council will hold an investigation and blacklist the offending instructors.

Representatives of the student body, when interviewed, deplored the immoral atmosphere at the party, for exciting jazz music was played, and the faculty members applauded loudly after each selection, encouraging the orchestra to further feats of syncopation. As the investigating party left the building, incoming carriers of "refreshments" were met. Operator 38, who is an authority, said the aroma of the drinks proved conclusively that they had a high caffeine content.

One of the regrettable things about the party was the snobbishness displayed by some of the dancers. Many—ex-Innocents—were dressed in plain business suits, but, as if to emphasize their superiority, some of the faculty members were arrayed in sleek tuxedos. The consensus of opinion of the student body seemed to be that in a state institution, supposedly democratic, such discrimination is out of place.

It came to light, in the course of the investigations of Operator 38 (who is not, by the way, connected with the administrative side of the University) that there was a regular organization existing, having for its purpose the holding of such parties at more or less regular intervals, whenever it is felt that the vigilance of the students, who look after the moral atmosphere of the University, was enough relaxed. The organization has not been passed by the student committee on faculty organizations.

A list of the members who attended the midnight party is being made up, and will probably be published later in the city papers, from where it will go out over the wires of the United Press. For the present, however, the students, fearful of what the people out in the state will think when they hear of the immoral conditions at the University, are suppressing the news.

TO A RIVAL

I do not envy you his fond affection,
And if he kisses you, I've no objection;
And he may gaze into your limpid eyes;
And let you hear the burden of his sighs;
And show you all the secrets of his soul,
Conversing earnestly of struggle's goal,
The while he sits upon your davenport:
My job as soul-mate I resign, in short,
But there's one thing that makes me want him back,
For there's a play in town tonight—alack!
And I am broke—ah, woe betide my fate!
And must stay home unless I get a date.

—CELIA.

OVER THE TELEPHONE

"The news-machine of The Daily Nebraskan is like a great octopus, covering the whole city," states a forth-coming book by the managing editor. There was some evidence proving this statement Saturday evening, when one of the members of the business staff called the office to apprise the news editor of a fire at the Delta Zeta house. (The managing editor stated later that the man had been stationed there for just that purpose.) Unscathed by volleys of advice from those in the office, the star reporter called the sorority house over the telephone to ascertain the facts. The following is his side of the conversation:
"This is The Daily Nebraskan, newspaper. Understand you had a little fire over there this evening. Is it still raging? . . .
"How many fire engines came out? . . . The whole force and the captain, eh? Is it out now? . . . So the danger is all over. Well, have the firemen gone? . . .
"Was the house filled with dense smoke, through which those there, clad on the spur of the moment, fought their way to fresh air and safety? . . . You don't care where you had it, just so you had one, eh? Well, who was on the committee?"
And the star reporter concluded the conversation amid the applause of the staff.

MOON THOUGHTS

On stealthy steps the moon slips in
And with her fingers white,
Makes patterns dim across my room,
And paths of silver light.
Swiftly she works there all alone
As I do in the day;
But when I turn my bold light on
I frighten her away.

—ALICE.

For the next few issues we shall be indebted to our friend Kitty K. for the epigrams and darts published under this heading:

FROM THE NOTEBOOK OF ADONIS:

A man weeps because his heart has been broken; a woman, because it has not.

DOOMED!

Claire Montesrey, I am afraid your column's doomed:
My prof condemns it as the worst of "slush"—
Although, until that hour, I thought it good—
Admired your individuality—
I find I was then benighted—far astray—
You merely try to show your cleverness.

Of course, it might be added that to him All things are bad which are a little new. Carl Sandburg—any who write modern verse Are victims of perversion, or, at least, Are not quite up to normal—half insane—I gathered this from English 22.

At least you may content yourself with this: Although you fall outside the group of those Who meet with his approval or his praise— At any rate, you're classed within the band (Containing many persons widely known) That stands against the customary thing.

—PERVERTED.

Perverted,
We apologize for changing a line or two, but in deference to the obiter dicta of Ole Buck (who declares, in his speech printed during Journalism Week that personal allusion is all right only when one can get away with it), we had to eliminate the name. We hope we have made the thing so indefinite that none will have the slightest difficulty in recognizing the professor.

Do you suppose the dear man was inveighing indirectly against our publication of some verses about English 22 last week? You almost force us to state again, old chap, that we have no intelligent critics . . .

—CLAIRE MONTESREY.

Iowa State Matmen Have Clean Record

The Iowa State wrestling team has just finished the season without a defeat. Their only chance to lose in a team match is in the Missouri Valley wrestling meet here Friday and Saturday. Only one contest is left after this one, the Western Intercollegiate individual championships at Minneapolis, March 20 and 21.

Ames defeated Nebraska with ease, taking all the matches and winning by a 14-0 score. Wrestling experts in the Valley say that the championship this year rests mainly between Ames and the Oklahoma Aggies, unless some of the dope is upset.

The Iowa State grapplers are team champions of the Western Intercollegiate Wrestling Association as a result of their victory last week over Minnesota.

Kirshman to Teach At Northwestern

Prof. J. E. Kirshman, professor of finance in the College of Business Administration, has been engaged to teach two courses in the next summer session of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. One course will be on business cycles and investments, limited to graduate students; the other on money and banking, for undergraduates. Those admitted to the advanced course will be mainly teachers of business administration.

The University of Oregon maintains a three-hole golf course on the campus. Students may substitute golf for gymnastic work and receive credit from the physical training department.

G. W. Rosenlof of the Teachers College spoke before a father-and-son banquet at Lyons last Tuesday on "The True Measure of Human Worth."

For Young Men There is nothing like a STETSON

MOST young men today know the importance of looking fit. Good appearance counts much in the game of life. The young man who dresses with taste has a decided advantage.

But—it is surprising how little thought the average man gives to his hat. It is his crown, yet he seems to stop dressing at the neck.

Be careful in your selection of your headwear. When you buy a hat, select a Stetson. Its style is right, its quality means long wear.
