Hitchcock Says College Offers Big Opportunity

Former Senator States That Value Derived Depends On Each Student

PIERPONT STATES NEEDS OF MODERN OIL COMPANY

Editor's Note: This is the third of a series of articles The Daily Nebraskan is publishing in which the problem of the college graduate in the business world is discussed by business executives. Today are published extracts of letters from former United States Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock and from H. W. Pierpont, secretary-treasurer of the Standard Oil company of Nebraska.

Senator Hitchcock was asked by The Nebraskan to prepare a paper on the field for the college graduate in public affairs. Press of other affairs prevented his writing an extended paper but the following letter concisely states the situation from the standpoint of a man who has served his state in the field of public affairs. He writes:

"A college education may or may not be of help in qualifying a man to meet the requirements of active life either in business or in a profession. Much depends on the individual. The college course is a mere opportunity. The man who goes through college in a perfunctory way gets little help. The man who looks through, gets none. The man who seizes a college course as the one chance in a life time to store his mind with useful information and develops his mental and physical faculties gains much.

Value of Reading
"Mere 'book-larnin' is not. College studies are only of value when pursued with an earnest and enquiring mind. I believe a study of conditions highly important to fit a man to enter life. To this end a college student should also read widely the best current literature of the day,—a newspaper or two as well as magazines. Then when he enters life he will not be a stranger to it but will already have an interest in it and a zest for it.

Summer Estes Park Conference Is Goal Before Eyes of Many Students

"Of course I want to go to Estes," wails the tired senior. "Who wouldn't with Reinhold Neibuh and Sherwood Eddy there? But get down to earth and tell me how I am going to there and what I am going to live on after I get there." (With a ponderous sigh, he views the checkbook balance.)

The studious junior thinks longingly of the ten days of real worth in an Estes park conference. The sophomore closes his economics book to dream of Estes park. The freshman wonders what it is all about and wished that he could find out.

The cinder runways for the broad jump and pole vault events have been covered with tarpaulins so that the rains have done no harm. The rains have been advantageous in wetting down the track and this afternoon the course will be dragged and rolled so that it may be in the best possible condition for the preliminary events Friday.

Large Crowd Expected
Because of the large interest which has been shown throughout the state and adjacent localities the directors of the meet are making arrangements to care for a large crowd. The large list of stars from all ten of the Valley schools are also a drawing card for the 1928 meet, as many trackmen of national prominence will perform.

The list of officials that will supervise the events in the 1928 Valley track meet were issued from the office of Herb Gish, athletic director, Wednesday. John Grover, Kansas City, will again be referee and starter of the meet. M. F. Ahearn, Kansas Aggies, will be head timer; Earl

New Yearbook Takes Center Of Attraction

"Breathes there a man (or woman) with soul so deep who hasn't into the 1928 Cornhusker peeped? Or in other words have you yours yet? Most everyone else has and to be among the majority, you have to have.

The advent of this year's yearbook Wednesday found practically everyone with one under his or her arm, hurrying to an unoccupied spot to open up the beautiful cover and absorb the contents thereof. A long line of waiting customers greeted the business staff of the Cornhusker when they opened up for business early yesterday morning. All day the office was full of students anxiously waiting to get their copy of "The Treasure Book."

Social Science steps were crowded with anxious readers and onlookers. As many as could crowded around the proud possessors, absorbing each page as they hurried through before the bell rang for their next class. All conceivable "parking" places were utilized by students who had already been to the office and received their copy, while others hurried to University hall.

Student Life Scores

Student Life of course came in for its share of comment. Laughter, applause and words of disgust were heard as a reader passed through "cracks" on themselves, friends or their organization. The Campus Events section received a great deal of praise as did the pages devoted to

FACULTY MEN VIEW PARKING

Dean J. E. LeRossignol Thinks More Traffic Lights Would Help Conditions

LEAVITT WANTS OLD PLAN

Further advocates and opponents of parallel parking among the professors whose classes or offices face R street were discussed yesterday. Dean J. E. LeRossignol, Prof. G. O. Virtue and Rev. F. W. Leavitt have added their opinions of the condition.

"Parallel parking really doesn't bother me because I don't drive a car," declared J. E. LeRossignol, dean of the College of Business Administration. "Parallel parking does, however, increase the traffic on R street and I think that there should be more traffic lights to eradicate this difficulty. It is also my opinion that Q street should be paved the entire length for if this were done, I think more people would travel on that street. This would lessen the disturbance on R."

Dean LeRossignol thinks that would be a good idea.

MANY SIGN FOR NEW SEMESTER

Early Registration Figures More Than Double Those Made Year Ago

TWO AND HALF DAYS LEFT

Registration for the first three days has more than doubled that of last year, announces Prof. A. L. Candy of the College of Arts and Science.

Professor Candy reported Wednesday that in the first two days of last year's registration sixty-six were registered, while this year one hundred fifty-six were registered.

At the registrar's office Miss McGahey reported that more of the students were taking their credit books out this year than last year, but they had no final check as to how the students were completing the registration as that is taken care of by the various colleges. Miss McGahey also reported that the schedules and the catalogs were very much in demand.

Closes Saturday Noon

Registration closes at noon Saturday, leaving only two and a half more days before late registration fees will be charged. Failure to register before Saturday noon will necessitate an extra charge of three dollars.

A notice will mailed to the student sometime before September and the failure to pay the fees by the time the notice designates will add a late fee of three dollars.

The advisors and the deans of the colleges are expecting more students the last few days of registration than they had last year, either because they feel that the student wants to save three dollars or because he does not want to brave the usual fall mob during registration.

Curator Sees Relics Of Nebraska Indians

Blackman Returns From Franklin, Where Several Village Sites Have Been Discovered

E. E. Blackman, curator of the Nebraska state historical society museum, has recently returned from Franklin, where he spent several days reviewing the work of an archeologist there who has become interested in some nearby Indian village sites.

Mr. Blackman reports that on a farm three miles southwest of Franklin, in an extensive Indian ruin, many specimens of chipped flint and pottery have been found. These specimens are scattered over a wide area. It appears that the Republican Pawnee, who lived in the valley of the Republican river from about 1450 to 1800, resided in small groups over a wide general area.

It is noticed that the house sites are confined to the south slopes of the numerous draws; the Indians evidently lived in houses made of a pole frame covered with a grass thatch, similar to the huts still used by the Wichita Indians in Oklahoma. Probably a dozen of these structures stood on the south slope of a draw, and a like group occupied a similar position but a short distance away, until an area nearly a mile square was discovered.

The field is rich in artifacts which

Then he sat on a wet pile of bricks near dear old Andrews hall, "at ease," while battalions one and two did squads right and left and up and down, and the gray clouds continued to spill sgu on the parade ground.

Calisthenics included

Then he marched around and about and a callous officer told him to stack arms and remove side arms, cap and coat (and tuck in his tie). He didn't know exactly whether to believe his ears the first three times, but at last got the impression that about three hundred men, including
