With the final issue of the Nebraskan for the year, I wish to thank all members of the staff and workers on the paper for their efforts during the semester and year. Production of the Nebraskan is far from being an individual affair; it necessitates the labor of many. Only as newspaper folks cooperate in the office, work earnestly and seek to better the paper through their individual efforts, does the campus newspaper become a constantly improving medium.
 —Dean Hammond.

SIGNING OFF
 Typewriter ribbons are frayed and frayed. Wastebaskets are jammed full. Newspapers are strewn over the tables. Reporters and copy pencils are scarce. The last piece of copy has gone to the linotypes. This is the last Nebraskan of the year.
 College newspaper editors are expected to do one of two things during their tenure of office, or a little of both. They are expected to buttress every project, every idea, everything that is attempted on the campus, with editorial laudation and prodding, or, expected to sail around in the heavens waiting like a wary hawk for some foe upon which to swoop and strike. Editors are criticized and commended. They have followers and enemies, sometimes bitter enemies. The very position that necessitates views and opinions of the individual places the college editor in the open. Students are perhaps among the most critical classes of individuals. The editor plays a lone hand.

At the beginning of the second semester the Nebraskan frankly announced that its editorial policy, while not drawn up along any hard and fast lines, had a purpose. Its policy was partly determined before a new staff was ever chosen. To labor for a greater university consciousness, to interpret affairs in the interest of all the students on the campus, and to strive for a better understanding between the University of Nebraska and the state—these were the triple obligations.

At the typewriter for the last time as editor of the Nebraskan, there is a feeling that the latter promise—to strive for a better understanding between the University and the state—has been the most worthy and has received the most emphasis during the last few months. UNIVERSITY consciousness develops spontaneously in the student. Interpretation of campus affairs in the light of the entire student body is difficult. Editors have their whims and fancies, their opinions and their personal views. They have a liking for introduction of personality and pet opinions into the editorial utterances. Very often these personal views are radically opposed to the mass opinion of the student body. So it goes.

The Nebraskan has not said "yes" to everything that has come to the surface during the semester. Editorials have been frank and written with the firm conviction that there has been a grain or two of truth in everything that has been said. How much influence the editorials have had, no person knows. Perhaps the greatest tribute that was ever paid a college editor was the assurance that the editorial page was read from day to day.

The Nebraskan this semester has pictured the student of the University as a citizen of the state, maintaining that the fact of his being a student is no excuse for misconduct and lawbreaking. There has been a strong attempt to bring to the student the understanding that the University resulted from foresight and industry of hard-working people. Only as the student conceives his university as the direct results of efforts of the citizens of the state does he become a useful alumnus.

So much for the general aims of the Nebraskan. Now for a hasty glance at some of the specific problems that have prompted editorial comment. The Nebraskan urged abolition of probation on the University of Nebraska campus. The degree of influence that the paper had in this step taken by the Interfraternity council is debatable, but there is nothing to the statement that the abolition of probation and the present editorial regime were simply coincident.

A veritable hornet's nest was knocked off a limb when the Nebraskan proposed a change in the method of electing the May Queen. No change was made, but there has been a promise, and if properly agitated again a revision may be brought about.

A political contraption—this was the Nebraskan's opinion of the Interfraternity council after its feeble attempt to reorganize and get going. Its executives have sloped over in grand fashion, cherishing their election more than the welfare of the council. The Nebraskan has not resorted to yammers for reform, but has tried to prick the council to action.

Legislation, appropriations, deferred pledging—all brought comment. There was not even a faint hope that the voice of the Nebraskan in regard to the appropriations for the University would be heard inside legislative halls, but the paper did have a desire to get students in an appreciative mood of the predicament of the University in regard to funds.

Deferred pledging, the Nebraskan opposed because of the added confusion and difficulty of housing students who would be thrown out by such legislation, without an adequate dormitory system. There is a belief that deferred pledging will come on the Nebraska campus and that it has advantages. The Interfraternity organization on the campus placed the Nebraskan in a position to foster or thwart. It did a little of both. The Barb organization has a future, but it must grow up free from shady dealings and without attempting to arouse antagonism that is going to transform the campus into a battlefield for Greek and non-Greek.

Aside from these major problems that have come up during the semester the paper has made an effort to light the way in a number of other cases. The sacrifice of professors in time and energy to contribute to their own field of knowledge, the danger of excessive expenditures on the part of students for social recreation, the insipidity of choosing representative coeds and the such on the campus, puncturing the bubble that has been blown of the reckless, irresponsible, hell-raising student, the penitential character of campus politics, the need for improvements on the campus, the place of Varsity parties, a dig at the innocents, and finally, recognition at all times that scholarship was paramount to all interests of students—the Nebraskan has touched on these subjects. Some demand further discussion.

With a hope that every editor of the Nebraskan is an independent and thinking individual, cognizant of the responsibilities that are heaped upon him, unsympathetic to the cause of campus politics and campus politicians, and loyal to the newspaper, this song is ended.

NOT A CORNHUSKER
 "During the meal, Duncan Roe—class nickname 'Drunk' and living up to it through sense of loyalty to Alma Mater—will fall out of his chair and be cheered for sustaining tradition. The volunteer quartet will progress from college songs to less printable lyrics under a barrage of olives and celery. Ernest Blapp—a good old Ernie who providentially has been recalled by the main office from his post in Hawaii—will get the cup annually presented to the alumnus who has traveled farthest to attend the reunion. A table or so will overturn. Pat Robinson will imitate Gilda Gray.

"The faces of Blank's Greatest Class will become ruddier and more jovial with devotion to our dear old college. The racket will grow so deafening that Wally Wilberforce, permanent class president, will have to pound and yell a solid five minutes to obtain anything approximating attention, and at length, Prexy will rise to speak."
 The above statements are taken from an article in the June Harpers, "The Saturnalia of College Reunions," in which a graduate of some college or university of unknown title explains the reason why he isn't going to come back for the fifteenth annual reunion of his graduation class. Drinking, a hollow sham of loyalty for the alma mater, and a general riot, constitute the majority of college reunions, the writer asserts.

Nebraska has just completed a Round Up program. The author of the article in Harpers was not a Cornhusker.

SO LONG, SKIPPER!
 "Goodbye Jack—see you next fall."

Nebraska students are soon to leave their alma mater and drift to the four corners of the state and union to spend their summer's vacation. The spirit of good-fellowship that has been so emphatically shown and grown to affectionate proportions must be deviated for three long months.

Hearty handshakes and last adieus mark the departure of one of the greatest student bodies in the United States. The time of life that is never to be forgotten by any Nebraska man and coed is spent in college. College holds countless virtues besides the omnipresent pursuance of knowledge.

Friendships are made. Acquaintances become fast friends and a few students choose to become life-partners in the exemplification of good-living close to the hearts of manhood and womanhood. A few tears are shed when close friends choose opposite paths for the summer vacation.

A great pall is soon to overtake university life, regardless of the fact that large numbers of students will attend summer school. The mental make-up of the students in summer school is different. Students of many walks in life will attend the summer session, with perhaps as much loyalty to the Cornhusker school as their predecessors. But the students who attend during the fall, winter and spring terms have but one object in mind, that of acquiring an education, the making of friends, and living like college men and women.

Wholeheartedly the Nebraska students will return next fall, eager to start their school life anew. But familiar faces will be missing, to be supplanted by new ones, "green" to Nebraska tradition and life. Friendships will be renewed and new ones made, and freshmen will begin to congeal with the student body of a conscious institution.

Those who graduate each year choose different professions, and often forget for the time being, their alma mater, until reminded by the meeting of college acquaintances. A Nebraska man never forgets the four years he spends in study, social life, and activities, until the time when his mortal being is no more. Just for three months, students are leaving, but what changes time brings to life and its players!
 Nebraska students are going home.

Students are wondering whether funds, clean laundry, or automobile will hold out until the end of the week.

One wonders if anyone will want to borrow knickers after next Saturday.

It is a good thing so many banquets were scheduled over the weekend, since the rain spoiled a lot of picnic plans.

The first fellow who starts to pack his trunk will get the best suit of clothes.

The weather man must have been a R. O. T. C. cadet at one time.

Round Up is such a nice thing. Fraternity pledges get a chance to show their fraternal training by giving up their beds to an alum.

Some students will have a hard time explaining the reason for all the delinquent notices that went home during the year.

One consolation: There will not be any more of these supposedly wise-cracks to write over the summer months.

When in doubt (and Round Up affairs seem to be bringing plenty of it) as to the proper form of the Latin word, it's usually safe to say "alums."

 sociology questionnaire sent to one hundred and thirty students, one hundred of which were returned. The questionnaire attempted to discover the vocational aspirations of university students and the varied results obtained from this questioning comprised the contents of the article, written by Neal S. Gomon, '21, Norfolk, who has served on the editorial staff of the Nebraskan the past year. He is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

It would be useless to attempt to point out all of the major events that have been chronicled in the Nebraska student publication, but, of course, there is one big affair that can hardly go unnoticed—the spring election. Digressing from its usual staid and conservative makeup, The Daily Nebraskan came forth in screeching headlines: "Political Storm Bursts."

Election is History
 Without a doubt, the 1929 election will go down in the annals of history and will long be remembered by the undergraduates attending the University this spring. The particulars of the occasion—the combining of the two fraternity factions to defeat the non-fraternity students—is common knowledge and needs no detailed explanation. Before leaving his typewriter for the last time this spring, this writer should like to express the gratitude of the managing editors for the splendid cooperation shown them during the past four months. Not only have staff members been noteworthy in this respect, but the whole university community as well.

Special thanks should be accorded to the night composing room force of The Lincoln Journal for their assistance in the publication of the Nebraskan. The managing editors are indeed grateful to the mechanical superintendent, J. R. Duff, and the night foreman, R. H. Seidel, for their untiring efforts in maintaining harmony between the Nebraskan staff and the Journal force. The assistance of Don Worral in charge of the "makeup" of the Nebraskan, has likewise been appreciated.

The cooperation of both of the downtown papers—The Lincoln Star and The Lincoln Journal—with the Nebraskan in furnishing cuts and matrices of all kinds and descriptions has been above reproach and has been appreciated to the utmost by the student staff.
