Students See Need of Campus Beautification, Improvements

Green House Curator States Use of Common Sense Necessary.

With the time of the year arrived for spring, but the actual thing delayed by testy temperatures, sunny beauty lovers look askance at the drab landscape that is the Cornhusker campus and wonder what's to do about it. Random palaver with people who looked like they might have some suggestions for making the university landscape less flat, less barren, and less desolate yielded the blanket opinion that many improvements should be made.

Query: What can be done to make the campus more beautiful? Max Schmitter, greenhouse curator (not Irish): "All we need is students with a little sense and consideration. I do not like to suggest any new additions to the campus shrubbery, flower gardens, or other landscape vegetation, because what we have is unkempt and shabby. Students throw papers and cigarette butts all over the place, until all we can do now is to keep the hedges and masts from looking like a junk yard."

Suggests 'Cupolas.'

After explaining that several flower gardens have been discontinued because the students and faculty tramped over them as well

New Opportunities Open for Teachers Agriculture Work

New opportunities for men in teaching agriculture are opening up for the next school year according to L. D. Clements of the state vocational education department in helpful suggestions, a pamphlet issued monthly by Professor H. E. Bradford and C. C. Minter for the Smith-Hughes teachers in Nebraska.

Many schools are adding vocational agriculture departments and several of the schools which have already made plans for starting the work are offering salaries well above the average in order to secure the type of man necessary to put the program across in a new center.

The advancement of such men to new communities leaves old well established departments in need of good teachers, and promotions are already beginning to take place all along the line, according to Mr. Clements. So far this spring representatives of the state office have contacted more boards of education regarding the establishment of the agricultural program than has been true for many years.

Because of the limited number of teachers, it will be necessary to restrict the expansion to a few new departments and many interested schools must be retained on the waiting list. Re-election of agriculture teachers in general is taking place earlier than usual and many men are reporting substantial increases in salary for next year.

Editor Predicts Interesting Issue to Appear on April 15.

"We fully realize that this has been said before, but we sincerely believe that the April issue of the Awgwan will transcend all others this year for entertainment and readability," assured Editor Lewis Cass as he dragged a pair of protruding legs from the top of a dust covered desk in the deserted office of the monthly humor publication. The issue will greet its reading public on Wednesday immediately after the return from the five day reprieve being called for the Easter holidays.

Especially significant in the forthcoming edition are works of former writers and contributors who return to the magazine for the first time this year. Robert Pierce, who served as managing editor of the sheet last year, returns with an illustrated page entitled "Our Own Exhibition of Modern Art."
