BAKER'S CLOTHING HOUSE,

1039 O STREET, LINCOLN, NEB.

GLEE CLUB CONCERT.

Willie had a purple monkey
Climbing up a yellow stick,
And when he licked the paint all off
It made him deathly sick,
And in his dying moments
He clasped that monkey in his hand
And bade farewell to the bright world
And went to a better land. Ah!
(Change time.)
Bury poor Willie way out in the woods
In a beautiful hole in the ground,
Where the woodpeckers sing and the bumble bees buzz
And the straddle bugs tumble around,
So that in the winter, when the slush and snow
Has covered his last little bed,
His brother Artemus may go out with Jane
And visit the place with his sled.
This is a mournful little dirge sung very effectively by the glee club.
Probably the most original and attractive program ever given by a college glee and banjo club is to be given next Wednesday night at the Lansing theatre. The club is immensely popular in the university, and also counts many friends among the outsiders. An immense amount of interest is being exhibited, and it is safe to say that this will be the most successful concert the clubs have ever given. The large sale already indicates a big house. There will be a great number of parties. Every fraternity and literary society in school is represented either by a box party or a theatre party.

Library Building Opened.

coln Business college had been turned loose, with a good salary and a paint can, upon our library building.
A fellow could imagine that he had a "load" on board as he tried to follow one of those curves as it wound in and out, forming at last an ox-eyed Albino girl, clothed in a Navajo blanket and Comanche war paint, or as he beheld all the dragons and snakes that came before him while he followed his fair guide around the hall. In that large hall were gathered the big and the little people. At times he would stop and admire a poster most gaily attired, or one at the sight of which a Lillian Russell would turn with envy as green as the poster's dress, or the mother-in-law would blush with the same shade of scarlet and cream that bedecked the poster's cheeks in big blotches.
But at length the fair guide has led her Virgil or Dante to the end, and there the efforts of one of our prominent football enthusiasts confront him. It is no other poster now than the sleepy-faced football player, leaning against a goal post, feebly clutching his football and feeling keenly the embarrassment of his position amid so much finery.
Ah, such a journey mixes our people feelings with bad dreams.

L. D. Richards' Address

The address of Hon. L. D. Richards before the Political Economy club at the state university last night was very well attended.

The subject of the address was "Socialism and Wealth Distribution." Mr. Richards succeeded, the subsequent discussion proved, in arousing a great deal of thought and interest. Following is a synopsis of the address:

The experience of the past three years has added to our store of knowledge. We know some things we did not know then. We have been experimenting, and experience is necessary to ascertain the best solution of social problems.

"We all favor such legislation as will enable our people as a whole to enjoy the greatest prosperity. If free silver will do this, we would all favor free silver. If a revenue tariff, the government ownership and control of railroads, etc., will best benefit the people, we would all favor such policies. But we must remember that the government must be supported by the people, not the people by the government. We determine whether a government is good or bad by the condition of its people, and their ability to live on their incomes.

"We all desire justice and the best interests of the greatest number, and such changes in legislation as will best secure this.

"Charges of favoritism, class legislation and dishonest government are today freely made. It is said that equality in privileges does not exist.

"It is true that all men are created equal politically, but physically, mentally and morally, and therefore socially, it is not true. Men are as near unequal as animals. This inequality cannot be remedied by the laws of man. Each individual must be held responsible for his own works. Individualism stands for the best progress and advancement. Socialism is directly contrary to all progress and the laws of nature. Deprive an individual of the hope of profit and industry and the incentive to work is at a standstill.

"Failure is not due so much to the present system as to laziness, shiftlessness and wastefulness. Instead of 31,000 millionaires in the United States today, as stated by Thomas G. Shearman, there are only about 4,000. Only 5 per cent of the property belongs to millionaires, the balance is owned by the laboring men and middle classes.

"The contention is made that the many work and produce and the few appropriate and enjoy. In considering this claim it must be remembered that it is a law of nature that man must work to live.

"The employing class today not only hires labor, but advances to labor the means of existence. No man can live unless he works for himself. In some manner, or under the direction of somebody else. The workman who today works mostly as an employe is better off by far than at any time in the history of the world. Great sums have been expended in the establishment of training and industrial schools, and the laboring man is better equipped for the battle of life than was thought to be within the range of possibility a hundred years ago. Wages are double and trouble what they were a century ago, and prices of necessities have fallen. This increase of wages is due to some factor and influence outside themselves. This will be found in the brains and actions of able men, providing means to increase the earning power of labor.

"Every new machine may be looked upon as an animal of a new species, which co-operates with man to increase the production of wealth. The increased product is the work of the machine, and the brains that devised it. The product is divided between capital and labor, and it is found that while the hours of labor have diminished, its share of the product has increased under the present industrial system about 50 per cent of the receipts of labor today."

Mr. Richards showed by statistics and figures the benefits which have been received as a result of these new inventions: Socialism, by removing the incentive to invention and suppressing ambition, would have deprived the laboring classes of their share in this increased wealth.

"The fault in distribution today lies not in the system, but in the individual. The individual is responsible for his own condition. The system has made possible a uniform increase in wages. Ability and capital are greater friends to labor today than are all the demagogues and agitators in the world.

"It may be true that labor has not received its share of the increase. But labor must ask itself, how large a share can it demand and receive without depriving ability and capital of their rewards, and decreasing their use, to their own consequent detriment?"

"No inexorable law, fixing man's conditions irrevocably, can solve present day problems. The solution must be reached through a recognition of the brotherhood of man.

"All attempts made to remedy social evils and inequalities on socialistic methods have heretofore failed. The correction must come from the rising education and a recognition of the correlation and dependence of all branches of industry upon each other.

"Laws cannot today be enforced simply because public sentiment is not behind them. For the same reason the methods of socialism would also fail."

Mr. Richards next recited a long list of laws that had been passed in the interests of the laboring men. Our laws are good. The trouble lies in their execution. This, however, is not the fault of the system, and can and should be remedied.

"The trouble today is our credit has been too good. We have extended our endeavors beyond our means, and are today paying the penalty. The remedy lies in putting a premium on honesty."

At the close of Mr. Richards' address, the discussion became general. Dr. Aley, Albert Watkins and H. W. Hardy spoke for socialism, and Lawyer Robbins assisted Mr. Richards in replying to them.

The discussion, while earnest, was good-natured and highly interesting to the audience.

The club will meet again next week to be addressed by Rev. E. E. Fife on "Industrial Conditions in India."
