BEARDSLEY AS A SOCIALIST.

Many old University students, who remember Joe Beardsley, formerly a captain in the University battalion, will be interested in the following from the Nashville Times:

G. H. Lockwood and J. P. Beardsley, the two young men who are traveling over the country in a wagon, speaking in the interest of socialism, made their debut in Nashville last night.

The first named spoke to a very good crowd at the corner of Deaderick street and the Public Square. The speaking was along the lines of public ownership, and the initiative and referendum, both of which were warmly advocated. The young men have been in Nashville for several days past, but owing to bad weather, this is the first time they have appeared before the public.

Prior to coming here they stopped over at the Ruskin colony, where they left their wagon, owing to rough roads. They came by stages to that place from Cleveland, O., where they started early in the autumn. Since the start was made they have traveled through Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee. Their way has been somewhat circuitous, and in all the wagon has traversed about 1,000 miles. En route the two young men have cooked, eaten and slept in the vehicle.

During the journey every opportunity has been taken advantage of to set the people thinking. Among the articles stored in the wagon is an organ, upon which Beardsley is a finished performer, and he is an excellent singer, as well. Lockwood is a violinist.

On approaching a town their method was to send Beardsley on ahead as advance agent on a bicycle to advertise the approach of the wagon, and that night the speaking would be held.

To attract a crowd they called upon their musical talents, and after enough listeners had collected, Lockwood would speak. In a few towns along the way they were forbidden to speak, but in the majority they have been unhindered. The speeches, so one of the young men declares, have been nothing but a quiet presentation of facts calculated only to set the people thinking and ultimately to use the ballot.

They will be in Nashville some time, and may start on their summer tour next year from this place.

The idea of sending out a wagon originated with Dr. C. W. Woodward of Cleveland, who advertised for a partner to go with him on his venture. Lockwood, who was in San Francisco at the time, responded, but before the two had been together any time, Dr. Woodward was compelled to desist, and Beardsley entered the partnership with Lockwood, and the two started out. Lockwood is an artist by profession, and one of the principal means of support the two have had has been his talent. Beardsley is a graduate of the University of Nebraska, who drifted into the enterprise by chance, but is there to stay, so he declares.

Both young men are educated and of good appearance. They seem to be deeply in earnest.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS.

Affairs around the University have of late been assuming a rather warlike appearance. The cadets do not exactly expect to go to Cuba, but they have been receiving instructions in marching in heavy order, that is, with all the equipments of a soldier in the field. Last week Lieutenant Stotsenberg spent an hour showing the Pershing Rifles just what a soldier's equipment consisted of, how to roll blankets and pitch a camp. On Monday afternoon, two of the cadet companies received the same instructions.

Tuesday afternoon the officers and non-commissioned officers were given an hours' talk on the manner of issuing rations to soldiers in the field, and other matters of a like nature.

In addition to all this, in order to raise the standard of our patriotism still higher, Captain Hunter, the most patriotic man in Lincoln at the present time, made a short talk to the students and and the following pledge was distributed among them to be signed:

"I, _____, hereby agree to stand by President McKinley and the congress of the United States in all lawful demands for a redress of wrong committed against our government."

It is very likely that the cadets can use to good advantage the instructions received from Lieutenant Stotsenberg, when they go into camp this spring as they may do some marching on the road.
