Quality Rather Than Quantity.

President Elliot of Harvard, says: "The International is a wonderfully complete storehouse of accurate information."

Best for the Household. Words are easily found. Pronunciation is easily ascertained. Meanings are easily learned. The growth of words is easily traced, and excellence of quality rather than superfluity of quantity characterizes its every department. See specimen pages sent on application to G. & C. ALL ABOUT THE CAMPUS. If you wish to make a life-long enemy out of your dearest friend; if you wish to transform that apparently serene young man walking along just ahead of you into a howling, raging maniac; if you wish that countenance which now stands for an unruffled, becalmed happiness to become the battle ground of tempestuous passions; if your morals are so degenerate as to delight in your fellow-man's misery, and if at the same time you have supreme confidence in those members of your physical organism, whose duty it is to carry you away from scenes of danger, then make a few swift strides, slap your friend vigorously on the left shoulder and exclaim, "Isn't this a glorious morning, sir?" Your friend has recently been vaccinated.

I don't like my present boarding house; there is no need of telling you why; you don't care whether it is because the pretty dining room girl has left, or because I find the potatoes too greasy. That is a matter of minor importance. What I want to tell you about is how generous some of the other boarding houses are. The other day I took occasion to remark to a friend of mine who "rushes" for a boarding house that I was disgusted with my present location. He at once began to explain the superiority of his house, dwelling to considerable length upon the convenient location and the excellence of the company that assembled there three times a day. Soon exasperated by such discourse I exclaimed, "But how about the grub? Do you ever serve oysters and turkey and mince pie?"

"Well, yes, once in a while, but never a breakfast goes by without a slice of pork on every plate."

Just at this moment another "rusher" rushed around the corner and taking in the situation at a glance exclaimed:

"Oh, come to my house! A slice of pork! Why sir, a dinner never goes by at my place without finding a whole hog at every plate."

Yes, get one of them at once. No, of course, they're not pretty; they are simply outrageous. But what of it?

What if the girls do call them "hideous," and "beastly?" They will have to get used to them. Besides they wear worse ones themselves. You simply must have a colored collar. Get one with great splotches of green, and scarlet and purple on it. "Things done by halves, etc."

I thought we were through with "co-ed sidewalks" for good. I remember the sigh of relief that I heaved when the last one was taken up. But history moves in cycles. The regents have seen fit to revert to the dark ages and put in another co-ed walk. But why, in the name of common sense, did they make it lead to the Y. M. C. A. rooms?

THE HAND I HELD.

I held a little hand last night, It made my heart beat fast; It filled my soul with such delight, If it could only last, 'Tis such a hand I love to hold Which fate doth rarely bring, 'Tis worth its weight in yellow gold—Four aces and a king.
