

had dropped out leaving Seargeant Reagan with first honors and Corporal Hyde second. The judges gave the honors to the companies in the following order: D, C, B, A.

The various companies banqueted in the evening, forgetting the balks each had made during the afternoon. Company D demonstrated their ability to keep the whole town awake till morning, the particulars of which can be found in the more racy write-up in the columns of the daily papers.

Delian's Banquet.

The Delians advertised a "Senior Love Feast" for Friday night, and such it proved to be. Seniors were roasted, toasted, tossed, (except ladies), and in every other way possible, made to realize their importance. But they took it all, (because they had to), and vowed that to be a senior on such a night was well worth the four years work. The first part of the "Feast" consisted in the pathetic testimonies of the guileless Juniors, Sophs and Freshies who told "how much the Seniors would be missed," "how much loss the society would suffer," and then shed a few crocodile tears and "think of the vacant chairs that could never be filled," etc., All of which the Seniors listened to with one eye shut. After the testimony meeting, the society adjourned to a banquet at Sutton & Hollowbush's. The following toasts were responded to: Our Alumni—Mr. Thayer, Our Friends, the Palladians—Mr. Elmore, Our Friends, the Unions—Mr. Saville, Phi Beta Kappa—Miss Hopper, the new Regime—Mr. Peterson, to the new President—Miss Countryman—Response, O. H. Allen.

A Farwell Reception.

Saturday evening, May 23, the members of Prof. Wilson's student Bible class gave him a farwell reception at his home. The Professor was taken completely by surprise, and a delightful social evening followed. A short musical program was given by Misses Elmore and Countryman. A paper prepared by Miss Hopper was read which gave the history of the class and expressed the gratitude of the class to Prof. Wilson for his untiring efforts in its behalf. Prof. Wilson responded very appropriately, Mrs. Wilson joining with him in an invitation for the members of the class to call on them in their new home in Chicago. Late in the evening refreshments were served, and some very unique puzzles, which received the name of an examination in the work gone over by the class, made the time pass merrily. Prof. Wilson will be missed by the students in this class, and it is a question who can fill his place.

Those present were; Misses Hopper, O'Hara, Quaintance, Post, Mumau, Elmore, Countryman, Sherzer, and Walwood, and Messrs. Theobald, Kring, Lovelang, Allen, Stolz, Robertson, Elmore, Hunting, and Kinton.

Farewell.

Now, of all my four years' course, only a few days of school are left to me.

My friends keep saying how nice it is that I am so nearly through, and how glad I must be. They mean it kindly; they are interested and appreciative. But if they only know the truth! After I have spent the happiest years of my life at the University, how can I be glad to go away? Here I learned the joy of study, the happiness of friendship, the dignity of living. All of my dearest friends are here, all the people who have come the closest to my own life. I must leave all these, leave the libraries and laboratories, leave everything connected with the University.

But it must be so. I have had such a pleasant course, and will always have the most pleasant memories of my University life. The friends that I value so highly will soon be scattered. We shall all be separated, but I am sure many of these friendships are so strong and true that they cannot be broken by time nor distance.
