Harry Seaman, of Kearney brother of Miss Ada Seaman who is now attending the University, was in the city last week. During his stay he visited the Legislature the Penitentiary, and also made a call on us. We regret our absence.

According to report, a celebrated English astronomer, Mr. Lockyer, has, by the aid of a powerful voltaic current, volatilized copper within a glass tube, dissolved the deposit found within the tube in hydrochloric acid, and then showed by means of the spectroscope, that the solution no longer contained copper but calcium. In the same manner nickel was transmitted into cobalt.

We don't want to be fastidious, but it shocks our sense of the eternal fitness of things, when we have to hang our new overcoat on the floor. It ought to be understood that as the wide rolling prairies of our young commonwealth are settled, and her children flock to the University to acquire a liberal education, the faithful hicks that, in days gone by, held the hats of those, who are now lights in the intellectual circles of the state, have more than they can do to support the extra hats and coats that come with the advance of our prosperity. Let them be reinforced. Since writing the above the hicks have been provided, and overcoats and such have assumed a perpendicular once more.

Pursuant to adjournment, the Junior Class assembled at the residence of Mr. Hawley on Saturday evening the 11th inst for the purpose of holding its regular meeting. After enjoying the luxuries of the season and an hour in having a real jolly time, the class commenced its labors, H. W. Caldwell in the chair. Reports of the several committees were received and resolutions adopted, after which an election of officers for the ensuing term was had with the following result: Pres., J. H. Worley; Vice Pres., Miss Emma Parks; Sec., Miss Elma Hawley; Treas. and Business Manager, D. H. Mercer; Critic, H. K. Wolfe; Chorister, Miss Helen Judkins; Orator' H. W. Caldwell; Poet, S. D. Cox; Essayist, Miss Cora Banta. After very mature deliberation the Class decided to give a public exhibition some time during the present term. Judging from the spirit and determination with which the members of the Class have taken hold of this matter we predict for them one of the best literary exhibitions ever presented to a Lincoln audience. The time, place and programme of this exhibition will be given in due season.

The Union held its first meeting of the term, Friday evening, January 10. Society was called to order by President, S. D. Cox, who with a few remarks presented the gavel to Mr. John Bridenbaugh, President elect. Mr. Bridenbaugh took his position after some appropriate remarks. The first performance was a lively essay by Miss Judkins. The essay was delivered in her usual vivacious manner and was well received. Miss Parks followed with a select reading. It was a humorous selection from Gail Hamilton, and gave some severe stabs at the stupidity of that creature man, as well as flinging some pointed sarcasm at the false modesty of the American prude. Next was a vocal duet by Misses Judkins and Parks. Miss Williams then delivered a five minutes speech. Miss Williams is always well prepared, and the present occasion was no exception. Mr Stratton delivered an oration on "Composition as a Fine Art." Mr. Stratton is well known as the orator of the University. The reading of the Tattler closed the performances of the evening. The Union labors under a great disadvantage, as it is situated on the third floor, and visitors often do not like to undertake to mount two flights of stairs. Still it is in a flourishing condition, and visitors would no doubt feel in a great degree repaid for their labor if they would
