

Some of the most comical speeches come from the little ones. The other day we heard a little girl who had been down town say that she had seen a horse which had the croup or the whooping-cough she didn't know which. She had heard the voice of a mule floating on the breeze.

Certain Sophomores are in the habit of relying upon the promptings of their class mates. Some astonishing information is sometimes elicited. The class was assured the other day that Homer was the greatest orator of antiquity and that the fame of Ulysses resulted chiefly from his excellence as a cook.

Miss Rogers and her pupils are preparing to give an Operetta, entitled "Snow-drop" or rather "Schnee-Tropfen." It will be given about the 25th. All who have been present at any entertainment given by Miss Rogers know that the coming entertainment will be something worth hearing.

The Capitol bill will probably pass. The people of Lincoln will feel easier after this passes. It will settle the permanent location of the Capital. The students will also rejoice, as it is no insignificant privilege to be able to attend the meetings of the Legislature.

The Palladian society had its meeting on Saturday evening the 8th, as Prof. Collier's lecture came off on Friday evening. The Union had no meeting. The Union had a meeting the week before and the Palladian had none. A number of members of each society improved this opportunity to visit the other.

It seems to be conclusively proved by the investigation that students of different sexes have been seen on the streets after dark. In view of this fact the Herald and Republican frantically call upon the mothers and fathers of the State not to send their children to such a hotbed of iniquity. We are holding our breath, awaiting further developments.

We paid a visit to the Tichenor House Literary Society the other evening. The Society is in a flourishing condition, and we noticed several who seem quite backward in our societies held in the University, taking a prominent part in the exercises. It will, on this account, be productive of much good. The only thing needed is a more thorough knowledge of parliamentary rules.

Prof. Collier's lectures were a big success. They were all welcomed by crowded houses. The Legislature attended in a body. The secret of the Prof's drawing qualities is that while there is food for the scientific mind, the many brilliant experiments interest those who do not so readily comprehend their scientific meaning.

A high license bill was introduced and passed in the Senate, the provisions of which apply to all but Professors of this University. At least that is what they say. Van Wyck introduced the amendment, making this exception, in a spirit of fun, and the Senate, probably disgusted at the pains taken by the investigating committee to inquire into the Profs' private habits, adopted it by about a two-thirds vote.

The following persons have given in their subscriptions in the last two months. Do likewise.

C. W. Cadman, Gilbert Tuttle, A. D. Gilbert, Prof. McMillan, A. W. Field, N. Z. Snell, Prof. Culbertson, J. H. Worley, J. Stuart Dales, F. M. Wimberly, Mrs. Bullock, C. M. Easterday, D. H. Wheeler, William Rundberg, Lu Ella Harlow, Geo. Hawley, T. H. Leavitt, H. A. Ensign, J. L. Burch, and L. J. Johnson.

Our Junior editor-in-chief is gallant but he is not much used to music. He undertook to turn the music for a young lady the other evening. The first time he was too late and she had to turn it herself, the next time he was determined to turn it in time and she was compelled to turn back. He began to perspire, and when
