Frank A. Wood, an old time University student and one who has made hosts of friends among us, died last Sunday night from typhoid fever. He was just in the prime of his life with a most promising future before him. He will be sincerely missed by all who ever knew him.

Mr. Eugene J. Hall, the inimitable humorous poet and lecturer is issuing a series of his original dramatic recitations in neat pamphlet form printed on extra fine paper beautifully illustrated, and when bound will make an elegant volume. These selections are entirely new fresh and wholesome and out of the old rut of ordinary selections that have been printed again and again. Mr. Hall in representing the New England character with its homely good sense and quaint humor is eminently successful. Copies can be had by addressing the author at 11 Michigan ave. Chicago. The price is ten cents each.

The Philodicean Literary society has purchased a new piano of the Hazelton brand of very good tone. For the present it decorates the chapel.

As soon as the weather becomes so severe the Cadets cannot go out to drill the Lieutenant is going to introduce sword practice, and a number of other amusements for exercise. This will be an improvement on the manual drill and will take the place of a gymnasium.

The Sophomore and Freshmen history classes are having a series of lectures. That is, each member of the respective classes has prepared a lecture and in accordance with a prepared schedule delivers it before his class. This is certainly a good work, but to an outsider it seems that it is sufficient of itself for the time, and that it is asking too much of any one to thus prepare in addition to the regular work.

The mortar boards are here, and along with them the criticisms of the city papers. We do not dispute their right to criticize, rather point to them—that of the State Journal—as giving our reasons for wearing the caps. The attempt to call out that "western spirit" against the introduction of eastern customs, is however, unfair, since the intention of the students was not those of the dude, but the best interests of our institutions.

Those mortar boards have come and with them much free amusement for city folks. The following are some of the most striking exclamations of the amazed people. A child attending a catholic school: "Oh I know he is going to be a Catholic priest." A butcher down town: "What in h—l is that?" Town boy: "The latest dude in town," and their continual song is:

I'm a dude, dandy dude,
You can tell by my style
I'm a dude etc.

One of the students while out with a party of on target practice met with quite a serious accident. By some means the small pin which strikes the cartridge and causes it to explode was rusted so bad that the pin would not play back and when he went to load the pushing of the breech plate down caused the cartridge to explode throwing the pieces of the shell in every direction and burning his coat very badly. The accident did not prove fatal for it did not scare him to death.

The evening of November 19th. Professor Hicks delivered a very interesting lecture to those students in the High school and University interested in the study of Physical Geography. The object of the lecture was to discuss that part of Geology which pertains to Physical Geography. It is evident the Professor is a very interesting speaker and the students were delighted with this form of instruction it seems as if it would be a good plan to have more of the same kind of lectures.
