

latter. A college stocked with children becomes chained to the daily routine of technical drill, leaving no room for the broad drill which should be inseparably connected with it. And children, hurried through the common branches at school, in order to enter college early, are either cramped throughout life by their superficial knowledge, or they force the university course to deteriorate to accommodate their ignorance.

We believe that the function of the college is not to teach "readin', ritin' and spellin,'" to fit the carpenter to handle the plane, or the farmer to plow, but rather to guide the aspiring mind through the realms of science, literature and art.

Let us have a few real colleges and they will be stocked with thinking, earnest students. Thus the high schools and seminaries will rise to meet the demand and furnish advantages to its pupils who remain there. In this way a spirit of thoroughness will pervade our schools and the general tone of intelligence raised.

A Junior co-ed of Mianesota University, inspired by a serenade of two Junior youths, gives vent to the following poetical outburst:

"Hear the war-whoops and the yells,
Fiendish yells!
What a tale of terror, now, their turbulency tells!
How they sound, sound, sound,
Through the icy air of night,
While the fish horns all around,
At the windows do resound,
With a Lucyfer-like delight,
Keeping time, time, time,
In a sort of "giddy" rhyme
To the blood-curdling ululation that so pathetically wells
From the yells,
From the hooting and the whooping of the yells.
