COMMUNICATED.

MR. EDITOR:—The students almost unanimously wish to have Dr. Billings retained. There is a general recognition of the value of his services; but there is one feature of the bacteria hunt in the Nebraska State University which has attracted then unanimous notice of the students, in more senses than one, and it is of this I desire to speak. I refer to the poor animals used to propogate his cholera germs. From lack of other quarters these things have been stabled in the basement, and the smell which arises therefrom is sometimes far from exquisite. The location is such that every student who travels the lower hall gets the benefit of the fragrance. In all kindness to those who are laboring to obtain an insight into higher culture, this thing should be remedied. And even eliminating the students from the question, the disgusting stench will work harm to the University, for it inevitably awakens thoughts of typhoid and yellow fever in the minds of visitors. The doctor's pets should be removed.

B.

MR. EDITOR:—I desire to say a word or two through the columns of your paper upon a matter which is of some importance to every student in the University. It is the order in the chapel during the morning exercises. Many times I have attended those exercises when disgraceful confusion reigned. More than once it has been necessary for the Chancellor to openly call attention to the fact that it was impossible to proceed with the services until order was restored. Now I believe those who attend chapel exercises should have enough respect for the place and for those who conduct the services to deport themselves as becomes ladies and gentlemen; certainly ten minutes is a short time for persons to remain quiet, and if they can't do it they should stay away from chapel at that hour. Such conduct on the part of a few is apt to make all responsible in the mind of a visitor, and is very annoying to those who attend the exercises for an earnest purpose. Let everyone take this matter into consideration and act upon it themselves for the reputation of the University, if for no other reason.
