

Misses Ellison and Fulton have discontinued their studies at the University and returned to their homes at Hebron, Nebraska.

Quite a number of the alumni attended chapel Friday morning, February 22, and sang "America" with true patriotic fervor.

M. I. Bigelow made a flying trip up into Greeley and Wheeler counties over Sunday. C. W. made a similar trip two weeks ago.

A lady sitting on a radiator; a fellow standing near; pleasant chat. Query—How did she get up and how will she get down?

"The non-com's will fall out and report to the commandant," was the command. The result is already noticeable in the companies.

One of our sophs, who would "never, never flirt," while walking along gazing at a damsel sitting in a second story window, met a tree.

A number of scientifics braved the stronghold of the lits and held a pie feed in the south hall on the second floor one afternoon last week.

Miss May Thurber has been detained from school for a number of weeks by sickness, and will give up her school work until next year.

It was slightly ridiculous; several "barbs" standing discussing current school politics: Graham sauntering by humming "Come with me."

J. R. Schofield, '88, dropped down among us Friday for a weeks' visit. We thought Joe was a prohib, but he says he now in the drug business.

When asked for some instrument with which to view the heavens, Tingley gave his inquisitor a Bible but neglected to instruct him as to the use of it.

We noticed Professor Vance, of the department of music of the Wesleyan, in the audience at the recital Wednesday evening. A number of Wesleyan students were there also.

When Webber, promenading in the botanical laboratory in the dark unexpectedly meeting a man, ejaculated, "Oh!" an echo, in a much more refined tone, answered "O-o-o-h!"

Professor H.—And Mr. —, how many examples have you worked? Bright youth—Why, professor, I couldn't get the last two. Professor—You say you got all but the last two? Tableaux.

The P. G. D. C. entertained a number of the Palladian boys at the home of Miss Moore, Saturday evening, February 23. The boys who braved the howling elements report a very pleasant time.

A crowd of "Piccanispities" gathered near room 6, February 22, and attempted to serenade the chancellor. A volley of overshoes from the ever watchful lits alone saved the chancellor's life.

Wanted—A good second-hand phonograph; one that don't talk too loud, (so that the professor will hear) and warranted to be in good working order; double cylinder preferred.—R. D. C.

T. Hall—"Say, I walked around that storage battery in the basement Charter Day and my watch has lost time ever since. How can I fix it?" Russell—"Go back and walk around the other way."

In accordance with the rule that the judges shall be Union alumni, the judges of the approaching Union contest are to be H. H. Wilson, '78, and S. D. Cox, '80, of Lincoln; C. E. Stratton, '80, of Omaha.

Cornelius Jansen, '84, has spent most of his time since he graduated at Lincoln last spring, in the People's bank. "Corny" will soon be a bank president or a bloated bondholder.—Beatrice Exponent.

There was a sweet smile on the face of our efficient registrar, February 14. Inquiry revealed the fact that it was the — anniversary of her birthday. May she continue our valentine as many years again.

During a part of last week we thought that a reformation had begun among the professors, for as many as five appeared at chapel for two or three mornings in succession, but we fear there has been a relapse.

C. G. McMillan, '85, has returned from Harvard, where he has spent several weeks in postgraduate work. He will soon leave for Minneapolis where he takes charge of his spring term classes at Minnesota University.

Numerous gentlemen were noticed on Charter Day violently shaking their watches and looking foolish after having interviewed the large magnet. As Professor Green says, "their watches were magnified."

Dr. Dean T. Smith, '87, and recently graduated from the Chicago Homeopathic college, shook hands with a number of his old University friends, February 22. He will begin his professional career at Decatur, Alabama.

If the students in English literature would be more careful in using the reference books the classes that follow would perhaps never appreciate it, but those who have to keep the books in presentable condition undoubtedly would.

Misses Kirker, Manley and Tibbles, three of our most popular Freshmen, were initiated into the mysteries of the Kappa Kappa Gamma fraternity last week. The Kappas are to be congratulated on securing good members.

T. Herbert Marsland celebrated his 29th birthday one day last week. "Venus" sent a beautiful bouquet of tulips and mignonette to the "Count Adonis." The Seminar devoured pie and howled their appreciation of the event.

Professor Brace was busy Saturday unpacking and setting up a number of pieces of apparatus for work in heat, that have just arrived, direct from L. Golaz, of Paris. The name of the maker is a sufficient guarantee of the quality of the instruments.

Professors Nicholson and Lloyd entertained the Chatauquans of the city at the chemical laboratory, Thursday evening. The event of the evening was a lecture on "Water" by Professor Nicholson. Violin and cornet duets were furnished by Messrs. Fulmer and Frankforter.

The announcement that the term would close March 22 instead of March 15, as was supposed, caused many a sigh among the students who are getting anxious to go home once more; and among all who expected a vacation of two weeks and now have only one week.

Scene, library: W. T.—"Say." Accommodating librarian—"Say what?" W. T.—"Professor B. sent me for a book." A. L.—"What book?" W. T.—"He said that you knew." A. L.—"Knew what? You had better go back and find out what you want." W. T.—"Thanks."

Would that the University and the University students had more such friends as S. L. Geisthardt in the city and state. Formerly an instructor in the school, now in business in the city, he is always ready to champion the cause of the University, and always more than willing to give the boys any information, advice or assistance at any time. It is needless to say that Mr. Geisthardt has many friends among the students.
