HON. W. F. CODY. Buffalo Bill and His Granddaughter At the Wild West Show.

There was an eruption of Buffalo Bill's wild west show in Sunday's Chicago Herald. Here is a glimpse of the grand enterpriser, Cassinelli follow, standing in the stirrups, waving, shouting, twirling their guns a dangerous crowd they seem as they take their position in the rapidly forming body of horsemen. And then comes the Arabs, their long cloaks flying, their little horses bending low and fanning the earth with their sharp little hoofs. They are like a dream from "Aladdin." They are like a dream from Asia. There is an American girl alone—an American girl who can tell you something of this country you call your home. She has lived her life in the wild west, and her friends are the mountains. She passes like a flash, but she helps her horse as he wheels about and faces you.

And then with a blast of trumpets and the noise of much shouting, comes the American cavalry from the distant entrance way. A pretty incident was added the day I visited the show. In the box below me sat Mrs. Cody, wife of Buffalo Bill, with her daughter and her daughter's daughter—the latter a bright little child of about 5 years. The little one had kept her place in the box till the Americans were heralded, and as the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" welcomed the soldiers she slipped from her mother's side and began a little waltz of her own up and down the passageway between the boxes. She held her hands above her head and pirouetted gracefully down and back, careless of the thousands who had turned for the moment from the field to watch her dancing—and then darted back to her mother with a laugh of delight.

With a laugh of delight that was succeeded in a moment by a scream of pleasure and a baby salute from two white hands. For here was Buffalo Bill. He rode from the distant gate towards us, not with the wild rush of common men, but with the graceful movement of a master whose eminence was firm. His horse is the gift of General Miles—a splendid animal, as proud of his master as a horse can be, and as clean of limb as an Arab barb. There is a salvo of cheers as the king of scouts describes his circle, bowing to the left and right, then pausing for a moment here at our feet to lift his hat and smile his acknowledgements of our hearty welcome.

Ladies and gentlemen, he says—and somehow it doesn't for a moment seem the formal address of a showman. Ladies and gentlemen, we welcome you to this congress of nations, and—but you lose the words there, for the cheers have not died out yet. But you catch in strong tones, "Rough riders of the world" and the wide slouch hat is returned to the head as the handsome horse backs away from the stand and takes his position at the front of the solid square. The little grandchild of the leader has never seen him at the head of his men. She is standing on her chair, clapping her hands and calling a rapturous greeting. The band is playing its swiftest music. Before you, in successive stages, rest the links of that chain which begins with the horsemen of Araby and connects every race in every clime, ending with this group of Indians who seem born for the saddle and the rein.

Lincoln People in Omaha. Lincoln people who go to Omaha, and Lincoln people have somehow acquired the habit of going to Omaha with more or less frequency, have discovered that the pleasantest place to put up at is the popular Murray hotel. Manager Ira Highty has the pleasure of greeting many of his old time Lincoln friends. Mr. Highty is a hotel man of wide experience. He was connected with the Windsor hotel in this city, and was for some time proprietor of the Hotel Watson, Nebraska City. He has friends everywhere, and his known capability as a hotel manager is a drawing card. The Murray is the hotel for Lincoln people. The table is unsurpassed and the rooms are the pleasantest in the city.
