* On pext Thursday night November 12th, one of the most fascinating stories ever told in play will be the offering at the North Theatre. "The Girl and the Stampede," a story of the life encountered upon the American frontier in the early days of strife with the invaders of Wyoming. The author has endeavored to picture in a true manner the scenes and incidents just as encountered and experienced by those who braved the storms and hardships of life in the days that the play demonstrates. The piece comes to us with the very highest endorsements as to its worth and from authentic reports from the various cities in the east where the company appeared, it is a production of exceptional merit. The western play has been an important factor in the amusement field during the past five years. A natural question provoked by this circumstance is summed up in the word Why? A person who has seen "The Girl and the Stampede" will not besitate a monent for the proper reply. They will say the western play exists and is patronized and admired because it pulsates with youth, life and manhood. It presents scenes and characters with which we are familiar from present recent associations. It revives memories of the most cherished days among the strongest reasons for its popularity is the fact it is clean and wholesome. It shows sturdy, manly men and women. A representation of such men and women and life as lived in the west in the earlier days attract the best which A large amount of provisions, we is today the largest element in any community. A men of family finds in it the which are soon to reach the State Aid spirit he would inculcate in his son and society, and by the activity of that asso- daughter and have them admire. The western play restores to all who have become tired many of the inspiring illusions of their early days. It has delighted a million people in the past three years, it will be the same for you. "The Girl and the Stampede" will be the offering next Thursday night.
