HOPE FOR THE PEOPLE.

The Denver Opera House was packed with people. Senator Lodge of Massachusetts held their attention for a time, but they were impatient to hear "Tody."

He looked tired. But without waiting for silence, with his head down as if he were about to charge, he bared his teeth and uttered something unintelligible in a hoarse voice.

It came to them like a blow in the face; and before they could take voice, he adding, pounding out the words with his fist: "We stand for same thing in Colorado that we stand for in New York!"

He got no further. The shout of applause that followed came in a roar of delight from a thousand throats. They cheered him as if he had said the one thing they had been waiting to hear, instead of the very thing that no Republican politician in Denver would have dared whisper to any single one of them in the dark behind a locked door.

I went home that night resolved never to forget the lesson. Often since, when I have faced the hoot of prejudiced opposition from my own small stage in public life, I have remembered Roosevelt, and filled my lungs again, and cleared my throat for another defiance.

COURTS OF "JUSTICE."

The people are much displeased with the manner in which court business is often conducted, but we doubt if they will ever accomplish reform. The people grumble a great deal, but steadily neglect public affairs.

Almost every noted lawyer has confessed that the courts are too slow and too expensive, and that they encourage litigation that is extremely discreditable in its character, if not positively dishonest.

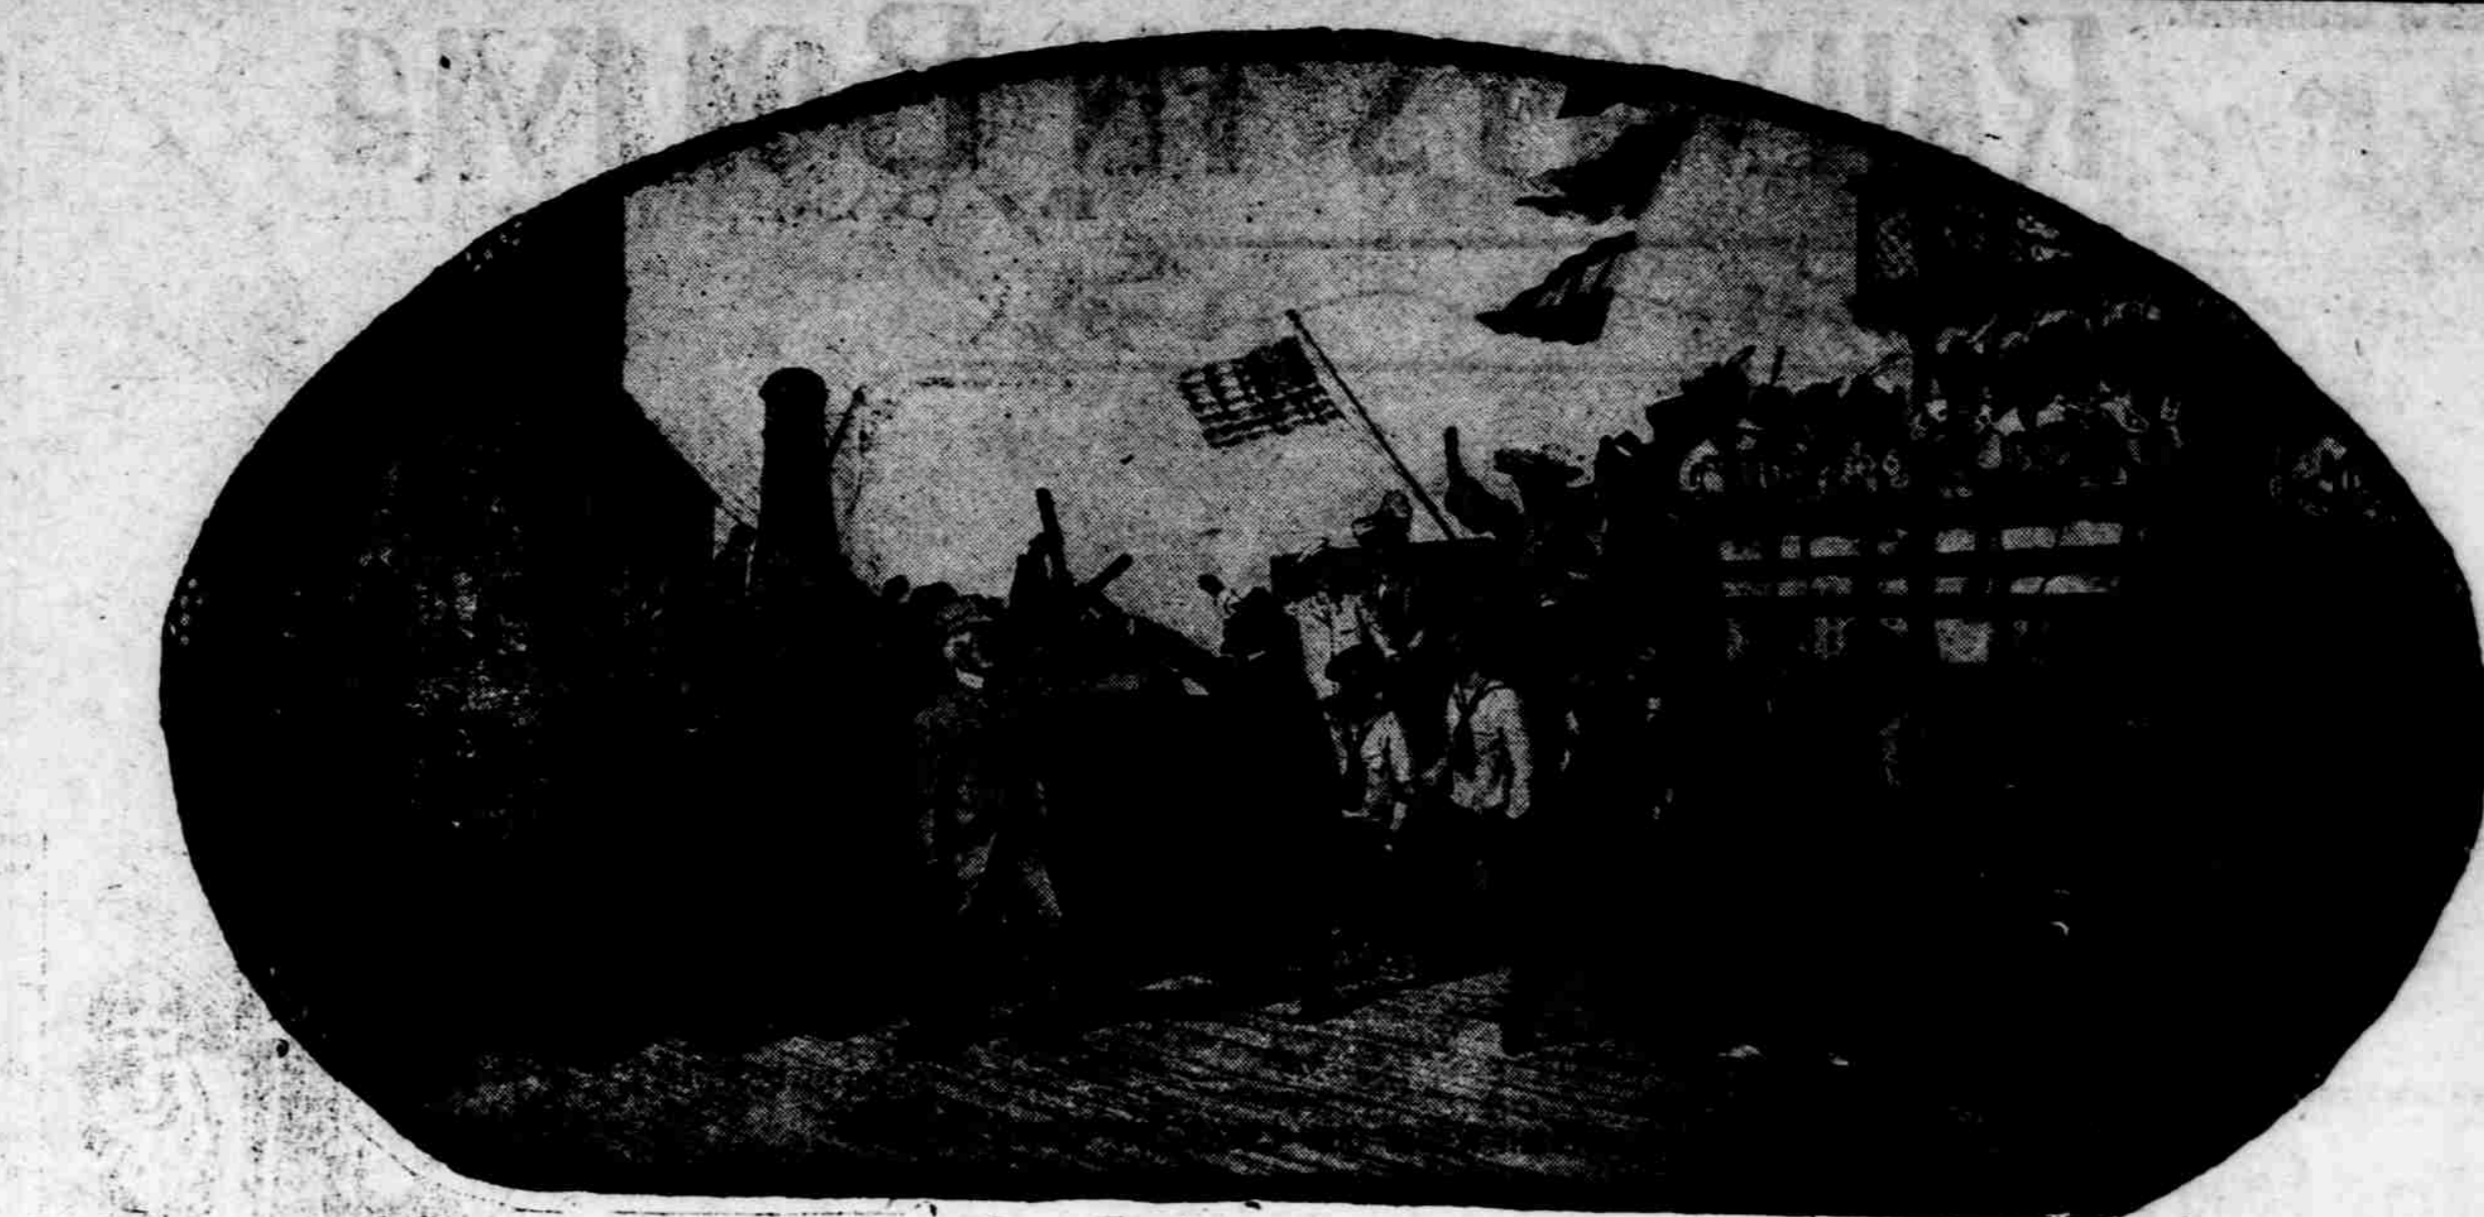

The editorial page was especially admirable. There were six columns of moral and political essays, all pointing the way to the higher life. No man could read that editorial page without experiencing a desire to scale the heights and plant the standard of reprobity upon the whatyoucallims.

Turning from the editorial page, the prospect is not so pleasing. Many fake doctors have their announcements there. They tell of impossible cures, they make the most absurd promises; they describe ghastly and sickening diseases in a brutally frank way, and often verge upon the indecent.

There were advertisements of patent medicines, making false claims as to their merits. The manufacturers of these medicines dare not print upon the labels the claims they make in their newspaper advertisements.

And so what is the use of all the fine preaching on the editorial page? Of what avail would be a ringing sermon against gambling, if the pastor knew that a poker game was in progress in the basement of the church?

A LITTLE CONTRAST.

There arrived this morning a Sunday paper that weighed about ten pounds, and comprised all sorts of colored supplements, and sheet music, and wall paper, and doilies, and pi ak and green sections.
