HISSING THE PRESIDENT.

The hissing of the portrait of the president of the United States in Omaha and Lincoln is justified by the New York Sun, which says:

"At an Omaha theatre last week stereopticon pictures of all the presidents of the United States were exhibited. Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln were cheered with the most enthusiasm, but all the others, except one, were applauded. James Buchanan, a few years ago the most unpopular of the ex-presidents, at least in the North, was applauded. But for the picture of the next democratic president after Buchanan there were hisses. Grover Cleveland, president of the United States, and holding in his hands an enormous patronage, was roundly hissed. The democrats hissed the betrayer of his party. Both democrats and republicans hissed the American who has not dared to stand up for America, the plotter for the restoration of monarchy in Hawaii. The incident was melancholy, but it was worth mentioning as a sign of popular feeling."
