Three years ago one of the most popular society organizations in the city was the Thimble club, composed of about twelve young ladies. Meetings were held in the afternoons at which time it was popularly supposed that a vast amount of sewing was done, and at six o'clock the young ladies' gentleman friends arrived for tea. The young people in this circle had a particularly gay time during that one winter of the club's existence, and this week when Mrs. J. H. Bigger called the members of the club together, many pleasant memories were awakened. The entertainment was in honor of Miss Fannie Hawley who is soon to be married. At the reunion of the club it was found that many of the maids who formerly composed it had become matrons, and two more are to follow, Miss Hawley and Miss Wilson.

The scene presented at Representative Hall Thursday evening was a wonderful contrast to the one enacted but a short time ago, during the closing hours of the legislature. Then the house was filled with weary statesmen, endeavoring to rail road through their long delayed measures; Thursday night at the senior promenade the society of the university and the city reigned supreme. The committee, composed of Misses Winger and Pound and Messrs. C. E. Elliot, Forbes, Houghton, and Weeks, deserve the credit for arranging the details of a highly successful "Senior Prom." The young ladies were becomingly attired in new summer gowns. No attempt was made to decorate the ball, but the committee more than made up for that by providing the full state band orchestra and arranging an excellent dance program.

The Phi Si's, the youngest "frat" at the university, held open house at their house at 12th and G last evening. Mrs. Jones' skillful playing was much admired. She played with expression and life and was probably never heard to better advantage. Miss Eiche's cello selections were a pleasing addition
