Friends of C. Y. Smith may find proof of his susceptibility in the following interesting letter from Maine:

"Rockland, Maine, Aug. 11, 1895. The sun shines not; a gentle rain is falling, and the guests of Bay Point Hotel walk along the long veranda and wish aloud for some signs of clearing off. I am contented as it is, with pen in hand, writing idly; for at my side she sits, writing too, to whom I know not; but we both use ink from the same bottle. I might put aside my pen and allow her the sole use of the bottle of ink, but somehow I can't. I hope her letter will be a lorg one. I am sure I can write for sometime yet, though it be of nothing. I would give a cookey to know whether she is writing to a lady or a gentleman, but she has covered up the address of her letter so I can't see it. It's awfully provoking and I am very anxious to know. After all it may be to her brother and I wouldn't care if it was. I really hope it is. I would feel so much easier in mind if I knew it was. She looks so pleasant and agreeable I have half a mind to ask her, but I wouldn't offend ber for the world. I don't wish to appear egotistical, but every now and then as she dips N. Y., where he will assist J. K. Doane, her pen in the ink she takes side glances formerly of this city in Y. M. C. A. at me. Guess she would laugh if she work. prospective Ak-Sar-Ben festival in Omaha is patterned, is the grand ball. Usually there are restrictions, as to the issuance of invitations, and an attempt is made to prevent undesirable persons from attending. The attempt is not always successful. In the cities named a portion of society recognizes and attends these balls, while another portion gnores them as entirely too "mixed." Those who have in charge the Court Ball of the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben. which has been arranged for Thursday evening September 19, are determined to exercise such control in the matter of attendance as will insure the presence of the most desirable people, and make the ball a social event of real importance. It remains to be seen whether their efforts will be successful. No tickets will be sold, it is said, to persons who have not received invitations. The following concerning the ball is from the Omaha Excelsior: "The social season in Omaha this fall will be inaugurated with unusual eclat by the Court Ball of the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben on route, via southern route.
