The Sunday school parade on Wednesday lined O street with people. People whose children were in the parade gazed on it with rapture. Other people only saw a line of pink faces shining with perspiration. But children do not mind the sun. They play in it and with it all day long and to walk in a procession with a band of music at the head and banners waving in front of and behind them was better than playing soldier with a make believe band. Some of the crowd who lined the streets were not in the children's confidence and they pitied them with "Just look at those poor little things" etc. Children like being looked at. How constantly they call to their mothers to come and look! On Wednesday the march from J street to the postoffice was a path of glory to the children. They were being observed three deep on each side by grown people, and their strides compared to their height were mighty.

Mr. August Hagenow whose picture is published on the first page of THE COURIER this week has for several years been the most active worker in orchestral music in this city, and is a concert soloist of exceptional skill and merit. Mr. Hagenow came to America in 1878 with Schriners Elite Orchestra. After a tour through the states he returned to Germany, and returning with the same organization the following season settled in Chicago where he filled an engagement with Theodore Thomas, Liesegang, Rosenbecker, Balatka and under Arditi with the Mapleson Opera Festival Co. In '86 he came to Lincoln and has been here since then, always actively engaged in musical matters. He was director of the Philharmonic Orchestra until '91 after which he devoted himself entirely to teaching. Last season he directed the newly organized Philharmonic Orchestra with unqualified success. So successful was this organization in every way that it will continue its work this season and the Philharmonic concert will be among the leading musical events of the season.

The Hagenow string quartette gave a series of Sunday afternoon concerts at the Universalist church last winter which will begin again in two weeks. The merit of these concerts was high and the church seating room was often insufficient for the crowds which attended. Mr. Hagenow is the instructor in violin music at the university school of music and this season will direct the orchestra at the Funke Opera House.

Mr. Saunders, professor of science in the city high school has just returned from a botanizing trip along the California coast. Mr. Saunders has been stationed down at the Hopkins experiment station at Pacific Grove where he has carried on his investigations of the Brown sea weeds. This family of sea weeds has been hitherto neglected by botanists, the only study it has received before being limited to the hurried investigation of a party of explorers and scientists sent by the Russian government to explore the coasts of California and Japan. Mr. Sanborn has discovered some six new microscopic varieties, and succeeded in finding the fruit of two varieties which botanists have long been curious about, but heretofore failed to discover. When Mr. Saunders' discoveries are thoroughly worked up and his descriptions completed, they will pretty well clear up the question of the Brown sea weed. He brought home beautiful specimens with him, many single plants being so large that they had to be cut into twenty or thirty specimens to be mounted. He has also several specimens of that ocean plant which sometimes grows to the length of fourteen thousand feet.

Miss Edna Hyatt, who accompanied Mr. Saunders to make his microscopic drawings will not return before October 1st. She spent the hot months at Pacific Grove with a party of ladies from Stanford University and will go to San Diego and Los Angeles before her return. Amid the fascinations of a California summer Miss Hyatt has found time to do some exceedingly difficult and accurate drawing for Mr. Saunders. In pen drawing of a scientific nature Miss Hyatt has established a reputation in other universities than our own and has the advantage of excelling in a line of work for which there is always a demand.
