

THE STAGE

Professor Sherman objected to the book "Trilby" on moral grounds. What, in heaven's name, would he have said of the play presented at the Lansing theatre Tuesday night? Mr. Potter passed over all the refinement in the book and extracted all that was gross, and added coarseness of his own. He caricatured Svengali and burlesqued one of the most delicate stories ever written. The play is common, uncanny, and the players in the company seen here this week succeeded in robbing Du Maurier of any slight credit the dramatist may have accorded him, and made the play melodramatically repulsive. In the first act nearly all the characters are burlesqued. In the second, the revel in the studio is manufactured out of whole cloth and passes the border line of decency. It was realism carried to an objectionable point. The remaining two acts were a decided improvement. Miss Crane is a competent actress. She could have made a better "Trilby" if Mr. Potter had written a better part. Svengali was ridiculous. Little Billee inspired pity. Taffy and the Laird were weak and womanish. Gecko came out well in the last act, as did Zou-Zou. Mme. Vinard was well nigh perfection. But the play dispelled any allusions the book's readers may have had. It was bald, uncouth, depraved, inartistic, indelicate, grotesque. The book is artistic, delicate, refined, natural. The dramatization of "Trilby" is worse than the dramatization of "Faust."

PAINÉ, WARFEL & BUMSTEAD.

The stock and good will of the Baldwin Tailoring company have been purchased by Paine, Warfel & Bumstead, and this firm is prepared to cater to the first class trade and supply high class tailor made goods at about two-thirds of the Baldwin price. The biggest and finest stock in the west, we understand. Mr. McGuire, formerly with Baldwin, is with Paine, Warfel & Bumstead for a short time to help with the rush.
