will cost $500,000 or $1,000,000 does not prevent the enthusiastic Omahans from pronouncing the success of the movement when the sum of $10,650 is in sight. Great will be the Trans-Mississippi and International exposition. People in Lincoln are watching the enterprise with genuine interest. They hope it will be a big success. Some of them are no doubt ready to help make it so.

The application of practical populism to the penitentiary has resulted in a breaking out—not of convicts, but of the wardens and deputy wardens. Governor Holcomb ought to keep his penitentiary officials under lock and key. The Lincoln police force is kept busy arresting released convicts. It has not time to chase offending pen officials.

Ex President Harrison became a contributor to the Ladies Home Journal. Then he "announced his engagement" like any youth of twenty. When he left the White House Mr. Harrison omitted to take his presidential dignity with him.

After Mr. W. E. Stewart was held up one night at 10:10 o'clock an esteemed contemporary, the Call, remarked that things have come to a pretty pass when prominent citizens cannot venture out at night without taking their lives in their hands. Judge Stewart is a prominent citizen, and he suffered great pain as the result of his meeting with the garroters; but it is possible that those persons unfortunate enough not to be prominent may sustain injuries in like manner quite as painful as those inflicted upon Judge Stewart, and it is submitted that if the prominent citizen is to be protected the obscure citizen should be looked after also.

As a matter of fact Lincoln ought to have more adequate police protection. If this city is to remain the dumping ground for the criminals of the state, if all the murderers and criminals and all 'round toughs that are gathered up all over Nebraska are to be turned loose, after a short term of imprisonment in the pen, in this city, then provision should be made for exercising a supervision over this enterprising gentry. The police force should be increased so that the residence district may be regularly patrolled.

A young girl came to Omaha from Boone, Ia., the other day. She went to a hotel. One night she saturated a towel with chloroform and placing it over her nose and mouth she went to sleep. She never awoke. A week before her father had killed a young man who was described by the newspapers as the girl's "lover." The young man was named Wally. On the eve of suicide the loveless maiden wrote a letter. She said: "I feel alone in this world since Wally has died. And I am going to join him in some other world. *** I think my father was justified in doing what he did. I know Wally would have killed me if he had lived. I was afraid of him and everyone knew that. I wanted to go to Fort Dodge, and he would not let me. He frequently drew his pistol on me and would have killed me had I not obeyed him. Still he was very good to me, and I liked him and am lost without him."

Here is material for some new Poe or some latter day Hugo. She felt all alone since Wally died; he was very good to her and she liked him. He drew his pistol and would have killed him if she had not obeyed him. She knew he would kill her some time. These are apparently inconsistent statements. But Annie Ryster in her crude way gave some indication of the possibilities of human emotion, passion, the complexity of it all. Love and hate are sometimes strangely commingled. Love and fear often go together. There was a great deal that was human in the side light on this double tragedy that sent Wally McFarland and Annie Royster to some "other world."

There will be a formal inauguration of Chancellor MacLean in connection with the annual charter day exercises of the state university. When Professor MacLean accepted the chancellorship of the University of Nebraska it is understood that the University of Minnesota agreed to hold his chair open for a year, in case he might not desire to remain in Nebraska. It is certain that the Minnesota university did not wish to lose Prof. MacLean. But the chancellor will remain in Nebraska. Indeed it is not known that he ever thought of not remaining. The president of his former college will assist in his installation.

Chancellor MacLean came to Nebraska very quietly. He was not heralded for months as the educational Moses for the benighted children of Nebraska. When he arrived there was no demonstration beyond a social recognition that he was entitled to as a gentleman. He made no promises and outlined no program. He simply took up his duties and addressed himself earnestly to the great work before him. Four months have passed since that time, and the wisdom of the regents' selection has been demonstrated. Chancellor MacLean has proceeded cautiously, but the university has already felt the influence of his scholarly progressive policy, and the community has seen in him a man of culture dignity, strength, force. His formal inauguration next month will be celebrated with genuine enthusiasm. The university and Nebraska need such men as
