On Monday evening Chancellor and Mrs. MacLean invited the resident alumni to a conference held at their home on H street. After a few moments of friendly greetings between members of classes, the chancellor invited his guests to go up higher. When they were seated in a large room in the top story, Chancellor MacLean told them that he had invited the alumni to his house for a family consultation on the needs and the resources of the university. He presented the estimates of expenses for the ensuing biennium and invited discussion and an expression of opinion from those present. After the business was finished the company was served with ices and cakes on the first floor. It was a very pleasant occasion. Classmates had an opportunity to renew their vows of friendship and members of adjacent classes recalled their hostility with regret that a fitting occasion for the exhibition of it had gone perhaps never to return. There were numerous encounters however where fire snapped from steel clad wits as it used to "enduin de wah." It is a pity that these pleasant social reunions do not occur oftener.
