THEATRICAL NOTES

Della Fox and her comic opera company will appear here at the Lansing Tuesday, December 29th, for one night only, and present her great success, "The Little Trooper." Woman's beauty and a military uniform, with their mutual attractions, form the ground work of a three act operetta, with scenes laid in and about Paris in the glorious times of Napoleon I. (?) The flirtations of the officers of the Thirteenth Hussars, and the susceptibility of the saleswomen of the Bon Marche, a leading millinery establishment, impress one forcibly with a clear idea of the spirit which prevailed in the French capital at the beginning of this century. Primarily, the plot hinges on "Captain Duval's" lack of the moral courage necessary to declare the abandonment of his love for "Mathilde" the proprietress of the Bon Marche, he having already married "Clairette" (Miss Fox) which, added to the well meaning and jovial stupidity of "Lieutenant Gibard" prompts "Clairette" to don a military uniform—a very neat and becoming one—and put her hubby on the stool of repentance. He really did not deserve the humiliating position, but for convenience sake he was put there. The affections of "Mathilde" are finally transferred to "Colonel La Tour," and this paves the way for a general understanding. "The Little Trooper" is an adaptation from the French by Clay M. Greene, and the music is by William Furst and Victor Roger. It is bright, clever and tuneful, and furnishes Della Fox, and others, opportunities in plenty for good work.

Miss Fox is enjoying one of the most profitable tours of the season, a fact that may be attributed not alone to her own popularity, which seems almost unlimited, but also to her admirable company. Unlike many twinkling stars, she is wise enough to surround herself with competent artists, and the results are such as to suggest a new idea to those who adhere to the old method. Seats on sale Saturday morning, Dec. 26, at Lansing theatre box office, 10 a. m.

One visit to Funke's opera house during the coming engagement of Edison's Vitascope and the Bittner Theatre company will convince any observing person that this machine is one of the most wonderful inventions of this most wonderful age. The scenes thrown upon the canvas background by this life producing machine are not pictures but living, moving human creatures, birds, animals, vehicles all perfect in form and movement surrounded by nature in perfect detail of color and form. It is hard to realize that one is simply witnessing a perfect reproduction of a scene where every detail is so perfect that the scene itself is before you. One week commencing December 28. Prices, 10, 20 and 30 cents. Matinee New Year's afternoon and Saturday.
