The news of the death of Gorham P. Faucon in Boston, May 21, at the Massachusetts hospital, during an operation for appendicitis, is received here with genuine regret. Mr. Faucon worked for the Burlington road for eleven years and during that time performed his duty according to his interpretation of it with exact faithfulness.

Those who have lived in Cambridge and know of the genuine disapproval that Harvard students entertain of Yale students will appreciate the reason for correcting the statement that Mr. Faucon was a Yale man. Mr. Faucon was a Boston Latin school boy, then a Harvard man and finally a student of history and economics all his life. Of the thousands of students whom Harvard has graduated not one was more loyal or grateful to the university than Gorham P. Faucon. He was patient and gentle and he would not have wished his friends to resent too bitterly the statement in a morning paper that he was a graduate of Yale, but it would surely have mortified him and out of friendliness to the gentle scholar's memory this correction is made.

After taking a degree at Harvard he travelled abroad for several years. When he returned he sought a position from a friend who is a director of the Burlington road and lives in Boston. He received it and spent the next eleven years of his life in the west, only interrupted by an annual visit to his mother and sister, who reside near Boston. His rule of life was rigid. Almost an ascetic, his business methods lacked the flexibility which the exigencies of western railroad demand. He based his diet, his sleeping, waking and study upon rules which experience taught him were best and he lived up to them, frequently at the cost of self sacrifice. The basis of business is expediency rather than any hard and fast rule of equal justice to all. In the freight business the man who ships the largest quantity of grain must not be hampered by rules which are all well enough for small dealers. The milieu of a man who does not comprehend that "to him who hath shall be given" and that rules are only observed by the scrupulous, is that of a teacher or scientific investigator. Mr. Faucon was not especially successful because his sense of duty, and justice was inflexible. He was painstaking to a degree, industrious, and faithful to a trust. He was out of harmony with his surroundings and he was not happy. Though possessed of a rare intelligence it was not of the money making order. He was a righteous, just man who sifted all things, and having come to a conclusion, held it though friends protested and self interest urged that he change his course for expedience's sake. Those who knew him were impressed by the strength of his character and a few will never forget his steady loyalty and friendship which were as much to be counted upon as his character.

General Milton Montgomery died in Omaha at the home of his son, Carl, on last Sunday morning, where he had lived for several years. To the old settlers of Lincoln the old general who had lost his arm in the war was a familiar figure. His sons and daughters are Carol Montgomery of Omaha; George, Gage, Eugene, who died a few years ago, Mrs. Buckstaff and her sister, Clara, Mrs. Jaycox. The funeral services were held on Monday afternoon. The members of Farragut Post accompanied the body to Wyuka cemetery, where the burial services were read.

On account of her grandfather's death Miss Buckstaff will be quietly married at home in the presence of relatives. The large number of wedding invitations have been recalled.

The various public schools of the city have been celebrating the end of the year with feasts of ice cream. On Friday Mr. Lambertson addressed the graduates from the eighth grade.

Miss Grace Huntsinger will be married to Mr. L. E. Deemer on June 2. The ceremony will be celebrated at her home on Sixteenth, between G. and H., in the presence of a few relatives.

On Monday evening Miss Maude Oakley entertained the musicians who assisted at her benefit.

Mrs. Wilson's mother, Mrs. Stebbins, has been called to Bangor Maine by the illness of her sister.

Miss Wasmer has been visiting Mrs. Lew Marshall.

Rev. and Mrs. Gordon spent Monday with Mrs. Yates.

Mr. Will McCune, of Omaha, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Slaughter.

Miss Florence Farwell has returned from her visit in Denver with Mrs. Higgins.

Mr. and Mrs. Ackermann, Several visitors from out of town.

The paper goes to press too early for an account of the Pan Hellenic party at the beach last night.

Captain and Mrs. Guilloyle are visiting in Fort Robinson. They will spend the summer in Canada.

It is hoped that the state university Alumni banquet at the Lindell on the 10th of next month, will bring together at least two hundred and fifty of the Alumni. The senior class of this year numbers 150 students, but there is room and a welcome for all who come with a dollar.

Hugh Hallett will give a reception to the graduating class of the high school Monday evening at his home 1626, N street.

John A. Ehrhardt of Stanton, department commander of the G. A. R. was in the city on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dorgan left on Wednesday for New York, from where they will soon go to Europe. The best citizens are leaving in swarms for Europe, which seems to have sudden attractions, in spite of the Trans-Mississippi show, for Nebraskans.
