The brave boys who meet at the Army and Navy Club in Washington to participate in the gossip of the service are very much concerned over a scandal in which several officers have become involved in the city of Cheyenne. The occasion was a visit from "Buffalo Bill"—don. Wm. F. Cody—who brought with him a large consignment of red paint. No sooner had he struck town than communication was opened up with his old-time army friends to join him in a sociable time. After a number of small dinners and large, cold bottles, a convivial party, composed of Mr. Cody and a dozen or twenty army officers and first citizens of the town, dropped in at the principal variety show. Mr. Cody bought up all of the house that was unsold when he attacked the box-office, and he and his friends moved into the boxes and front seats. In the course of a little while the performance was turned into a hilarious riot. The soubrettes and comedians on the stage were deluged with showers of silver coin, speeches were made from the boxes by Cody and others, and finally the more lively members of the party took possession of the stage and gave an exhibition of high-class talent, the like of which was never seen before in that wild and woolly community. From the theatre "Buffalo Bill" and his friends navigated across the street, bought out a saloon and gave a reception. That also degenerated into a riot. The next day there was remorse. Cheyenne was scandalized, and various good citizens threatened to carry the matter to Secretary Alger and have the officers who took part in the orgy court-martialed. The ladies of the community mixed in and gave it out that if their brothers, husbands and fathers weakened they would organize and bring the story to the attention of the War Department. So far as known, Secretary Alger remains in official ignorance of the affair, but it will be strange if he is not obliged to take action. Nothing has so alarmed and excited the Army and Navy Club since the late Admiral Meade threw a paper bomb-shell at President Cleveland and Secretary Herbert and then sought refuge in the club, refusing to come out for weeks.—Town Topics.
