Mrs. Will Owen Jones Will give a recital in the University chapel on Tuesday evening, February 1.

Prime Minister—Is the King suffering from dyspepsia?

Court Physician—No. Why?

Prime Minister—He just said that missionaries gave him a pain.

Mrs. Golightly—If you want to go on the stage, my dear, why don't you get a divorce from old Moneyburn as a means to the end?

Miss Manhattan—Because, unfortunately that would be an end to the meats.

First Citizen—The people, sir, will soon be up in arms against this new Milk Trust.

Second Citizen—Possibly, sir, but in the end the people will take water.

Mrs. Hoyle—So you are back from Europe.

Mrs. Doyle—Yes, and I find everything so different here.

Mrs. Hoyle—I suppose you did have to pay cash over there.

It was in the next room to mine at the Hoffman House last night

"I love you—I do love you!" The voice was a young man's, very soft and winning.

"Well, I thought, "this is interesting!" "Oh, if you would only be mine!" he pleaded.

"Heub!" I continued thinking, "she must be interesting!"

"Come to my arms!" he went on.

"Jove!" I said to myself. "But he'd be a winner at a matinee idol!"

"Come, my darling!" he repeated.

Apparently this entreated was obeyed, for the next thing I heard was:

"If there was only more of you!"

"How much does the beast want?" said half aloud.

"Oh, Ruinar!—Ruinar!" he sighed.

I solved the mystery: It was the talented and handsome young son of Joseph Jefferson practicing a scene with a cold bottle as an opposite.

Bounder—Oh, stuff! I don't call this a fancy dress ball.

Rounder—Why not?

Bounder—The sort of fancy dress ball I like is where you have to fancy the dress.

Cholly—The papers say they are going to develop men from monkeys.

May (meaningly)—I should think that they would be satisfied with having developed monkeys from men.

She—It's decidedly unpleasant having chapped lips.

He—But suppose I were the hap?
