One of the standard amusements of Chicago society is telling stories about Mrs. Leiter, who has won the proud position of the modern Mrs. Malaprop. At a recent dinner, during a lull in the conversation, Mrs. Chatfield Taylor leaned forward and said: "Have any of you heard the latest about Mrs. Leiter?" Immediately there was a buzz as of bees or saws—everybody seemed to be talking at once and to each other. Mrs. Chatfield Taylor was puzzled by this impoliteness, but, fancying that she had not been heard, she struck the table with her pretty hands and exclaimed: "Oh, I must tell you Mrs. Leiter's latest!" The buzz was about to recommence when Mr. Chatfield Taylor said very distinctly:

"Then you had better tell it to Mr. Joseph Leiter, my dear. He is sitting on your side of the table!"

For a moment there was dead silence. Then Mrs. Chatfield Taylor took the only way out of the dilemma. Her eyes sparkled and she said: "All right. I will tell him!"

And she did. Then Mr. Joseph Leiter laughed heartily and said:

"Well, that's just like the old lady!"

But whether the story that Mrs. Chatfield Taylor told to Mr. Joseph Leiter was the one that she had intended to tell for the general joy of the whole table this deponent saith not.
