SKETCHES BY THE WAY.

On the evening of June 16 Dr. J. H. Canfield gave the commencement address before the graduating class of the Northwestern university at the Auditorium. There were not less than six thousand people present and a more quiet and attentive audience could hardly be imagined. Every seat on the main floor and gallery was taken and many stood until the close of the address. Dr. Canfield's subject was "The University of Power" and he said the unit of power is the individual. He traced the development of individualism through early history, showed that the Oriental monarchies were the government of the masses by the few. He noted the first recognition of the individual in the government of Greece but it was secondary, the state always being foremost. Art, architecture, philosophy, poetry and the drama were known in the agora, not in the home. The first great movement toward freedom was the French revolution, which could have originated in no other race but the Teutonic and which marked the rise of individualism in ecclesiastical affairs and in literature, while the founding of parliament in England and the survival of the Saxon influence formed the theme of civil progress. He traced the growth of individualism in our own government from the time of the revolution, through the period of the rebellion, and closed by impressing upon the young men and women who had completed their college course the added responsibilities that come to each one of us who live in an age when individualism has become the central thought.

At the close of the address four hundred and fifty-seven students received diplomas, among them Charlie Elliot of Lincoln, who received the degree of Bachelor of Medicine. As he stepped upon the rostrum to receive his degree Dr. Canfield came forward with characteristic courtesy and shook him by the hand. Mrs. Canfield, Mrs. Elliot and a few friends occupied a box at the left of the speaker. Mrs. Canfield is in perfect health and expects to remain in Chicago for a time, where she will share the writer's studio at the Studebaker building. Dr. Canfield has gone to Williams town to give an address before the Y. M. C. A. and to Boston, where he delivered the commencement address at the Groton academy.

The students exhibit at the Art institute opens on Saturday, June 25. One large gallery is filled with studies in oil and water colors, from still-life and life, another contains the exhibit of black and white, and a smaller gallery the work in clay. As a whole the exhibition shows earnest, conscientious work and we hope to be able to bring a number of the best canvases to Lincoln with us in
