The wedding today at Marion, Mass., that quaint little summer resort on Buzzard's Bay, of Mr. Richard Harding Davis, "ex-Philadelphian," and Miss Cecile Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Marshall Clark of Chicago, has not unnaturally given rise to no inconsiderable gossip among both bridegroom and bride. Mr. Davis delayed his entrance into matrimony until this rather late day, if I am to believe his own statement, not because of any lack of excellent chances but because he believed that for a young and ambitious man, desirous of making his mark in literature, marriage served as a more or less deterring influence. It is evident,
