SOCIETY

Flower Carnival.

A prominent feature of the social life of Lincoln was the flower parade on Wednesday. On the afternoon of the festival the picture presented was incomparably brilliant. From 4 o'clock until early dusk, all along the line of march, the piazzas and windows were crowded with interested spectators from all over the state. Chic hats and gowns were in the ascendant, and crowds of spectators on foot, in windows, on balconies, and in vehicles of every description added to the brightness of the scene. The parade was especially lovely, as the participants were the most beautiful women of the west. The streets of the city already gayly decorated for the street fair were transformed when the long stream of color poured through them. Along the line of march every available point of vantage had been seized upon by the waiting people. The whole city was in line, awaiting the floral event, and added to these, crowds from without thronged the streets all day, so that when the procession finally formed it was difficult to clear the passage way. The careful and elaborate massing of flowers and the lavish expenditure of the dainty blossoms, made a never-to-be-forgotten spectacle.

The parade was headed by Mayor Winnett and mounted policemen, followed by four buglers. Ernest C. Folsom, the chief marshal and his staff wearing the queen's colors and a band in white uniforms. Following were fire chief Wiedman and Mrs. Wiedman in the chief's wagon transformed by red and white roses. The hose wagon from Engine house No. 3 followed with a crew of firemen. W. W. Woodward of the fire committee of the city council was in charge. Blue and white chrysanthemums were the decorations.

The queen of the carnival rode alone in a great shell of white satin, decorated with purple and white chrysanthemums. She was gowned in white satin brocade over a petticoat elaborately spangled with silver. The corsage was low displaying a magnificent diamond necklace. The queen also wore a tiara white the traditional robe of ermine and purple velvet trailed from her shoulders. A touch of oriental and barbaric splendor was added in the person of a black page who held over her head a great fan such as a dusky slave held between the sun and the queen of the Nile when she appeared in the streets of Alexandria. The fan was formed of purple and white chrysanthemums. The other pages, Harry Watson and Payson Ewing in the court livery, white satin trousers and purple coats, accompanied her. Footmen in white and purple livery paced by the horse's heads. Ten maids of honor gowned in white and riding in phaetons of different colors followed. Like the queen they rode with uncovered heads. Their footmen in the royal livery indicated their mistresses' court office. The queen of the parade was Mrs. John B. Wright, a representative of a Southern family, famous for its handsome women. Her maids of honor who followed were ten in number; Misses Cochran, Watkins, Hoover, Poynter, Houck, Frances Gere, Welch, Garton, Jessie Macfarland, and Cunningham, some of Lincoln's most popular debutantes, who rode, two each, in carriages decorated in blue morning-glories, pink hydrangeas, violets, red poppies, and yellow chrysanthemums. They were accompanied by out-riders in purple and white.

A symphony in lillies was the high spider phaeton of Mrs. John W. McDonald, fairly smothered in lillies and green frogs and upholstered in white satin, the wheels being four immense lillies mounted on green leaves with frogs. A page, all in white with green sash, rode on the footman's seat. This gorgeous equipage was drawn by snow white Arabian horses, caparisoned in white satin with monograms of gold, and green ostrich plumes; and was post-riden. The rider, after the style of 1700, rode on a white satin saddle and wore an Eton jacket of green velvet, lace stock, white breeches, top boots and white silk hat. Mrs. McDonald wore a three quarter length French coat of corn colored velvet, large picture hat of green velvet and white plumes, and carried a La Tosca stick of gold wreathed in green; making a most beautiful picture. Her accompanying out riders were her sister, Miss Regna, just from Georgetown convent; and Mr. Owen Oakley, from the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis. Miss Regna in white habit with an immense bouquet of American beauties tied to her riding crop, mounted on the tall sorrel "Colonel Vifquain", caparisoned in American beauties and white satin. Mr. Oakley in his service uniform, mounted on the brown "Ben Bolt", caparisoned in scarlet poppies and white satin enhanced this already charming vision.

Misses Nelia Cochran and Clara Watkins rode in a shell of American Beauty roses. They carried white parasols, daintily trimmed with roses. Josephine Poynter and Miss Helen Hoover rode in a phaeton of turquoise blue. Miss Poynter was also gowned in the same dainty color.

In a phaeton completely covered with white roses rode Misses Laura Houtz and Frances Gere. Both were dressed in white and carried white parasols.

Misses Blanche Garton and Helen Welch, phaeton of pink roses.

Misses Macfarland and Cunningham the last of the maids of honor, rode in a phaeton of white and green.

The parade consisted of the following ladies and equipages:

Kappa Alpha Theta fraternity represented by Misses Ellen Douglas, Ruth Wilson, Lida Miller, May Honeywell, Jessie Macfarland, Ella Wirt and Letha Daniels in a carriage of yellow chrysanthemums. They also carried yellow and black parasols.

Mrs. C. A. Robbins, surrey covered with bride's roses and ferns, accompanied by Mrs. F. W. Hill, Misses Mary and Edith Robbins, in gowns of white and green.

Mrs. Archie Easign, surrey decorated with white and pink chrysanthemums. Both Mrs. Easign and Mrs. Bacon, who accompanied her, were in pink and white.

Delta Gamma fraternity, boulevard stanhope beautifully decorated with masses of pink roses and heavy ropes of asparagus ferns. The white horses were driven by Miss Helen Gregory, accompanied by Miss Fanny Cole, both in white, with white parasols, adorned with pink roses and foliage.

Mrs. W. C. Wittmann, park wagon, covered with shaded purple fleur de lis, the flowers painted. The spokes of the wheels decorated with large fleur de lis stars Mrs. Wittmann wore smoke colored silk muslin over gray silk, white felt hat heavy with plumes. Butterflies of black and gold were scattered among the flowers. David Martindale, Indian costume, rode in advance of Mrs. Wittmann.

Dr. Tefft, carriage in red and black poppies and ferns accompanied by Mrs. W. O. Thomas, Mrs. George Fawell and Mrs. John Fawell, all of whom were in white gowns and leghorn hats trimmed with poppies. A large white umbrella, decorated with poppies.

Mrs. C. M. Leighton, surrey, decorated with pink roses and foliage, accompanied by Mrs. Edith Leighton Hall and Harold and Otis Hall.

Mrs. C. H. Rudge, phaeton, decorated with purple and white pond lilies, gowned in white muslin over purple satin accompanied by Tommy Usher, as page, dressed in white satin.

Mrs. W. D. Fitzgerald, carriage trimmed with blue cornflowers with natural green cornstalks. Other occupants of the carriage were Mrs. Gruener of St. Louis and Misses Jewell Holben and Helen Fitzgerald. The young ladies wore dainty gowns of blue and cream and large picture hats.

Prof. W. G. L. Taylor, tandem cart artistically decorated with yellow chrysanthemums. Mrs. Taylor in yellow and Miss Daisy Minor in white.

Mrs. C. E. Sanderson, phaeton decorated with heliotrope, wisteria and pale pink roses, Mrs. Sanderson in delicate pink and white and Mrs. Henry Sanderson in heliotrope.
