Yes, your auditorium is tine, the acoustics are perfect. The quiet group forth optimistic theories very timorously. of listeners who sat in the corner of the gallery furthest from the stage that bulary of adj clives has been exhausted night of the Event lost none of the golden tones. Yet I think few of them playing into language. The attempt is would wish to sit just there again when Paderewski plays. A nameless something was dissipated by the distance; no opera glass could supply it; we felt that with showering pearls of a waterfall, it was there, but out of our grasp. A thirst for a real draught of the nectar winds; the similes do not describe and grew as the hour slipped by until we do not clarify the notion in any reader's we might go and put a hand on the tegether could tell the story of Appasp'ano, like a blind and deaf Helen Kel. sionata. It is something deeper. let, craving the thrill of the sound The sensation of far-offness, intangible and hardly analyzed, seemed to cover us, and we sat and listened as through a mist. It was beautiful, and not in any artistic way failing in effect. But while musicians eathuse over the stupend susnere, the wonder of technique, and those less versed expatiate upon brilliant runs and l'quid melc dies, some of us feit the fog of distance stil about us. We shall know better where to place ourselves another time when Paderewski plays.

But as for acoustics-well, there are acoustics and acoustics. The builders builded well, but-forgot one thing, apparently. The Darwinian theory does not seem to have entered into their calculations. I am not so sure about mankind, and I fear that womankind bas lost all traces of the primeval, but I am positive that in boykind there still lingers the o'd tree-ohmbing insticct. I was led to philesophize a little along this line the other day when 1 saw a blind boy who is not o'er fond of physical exertion ascend to the highest branch of a tall tree. It was not the prairie man's hope of looking over and around that impelled him, for he could s e nothing? It must have been, therefore, the Darwinian theory that led him sky ward.

So proof was aff 'r led that the acoustics of the new building are quite extraoidinary. One can hear everything that goes on inside and outside at the same time. Mingled with the sweetest of harmonies was the ra-ping, crashing sound of foot steps on a sleeted roof. The audience had done well to get itself into any sort of ease after having been mashed to a pulp in the effort to gain entrance to the ball, and this added torture was almost too much. I imagine that those on the floor below began very shortly after the program don't change cars. moved to put a quietus on it long be- the globe. One of the best things Paderewski did for his audience was to rid them of the notion that he is a bunile of freakhair was pardonable. It afforded the poor man some shelter from the stare of the populace.

GRAVE AND GAY.

Feminine Finance When Gladys went to boarding school She learned to cut a dash,

And in her letters, as a rule, Appeared appeals for cash.

The modest sum which she had deemed Sufficient, ere she went,

Soon like the merest trifle seemed, And vanished to a cent.

For ice cream sodas, matinees, Club dues and golfing sticks

The dollars quickly went their ways And left her in a fix.

So to papa she makes appeal To double the amount,

Lest other girls should make her feel That she's of no account.

Papa, alarmed, designs a cure, And writes that she must spend Less money, for he is so poor That cash he cannot send.

She's touched to think that to such straits Her good papa is brought, But while her kind heart palpitates

She has a happy thought.

"Poor, dear papa," she writes, all doubt Gone from her little head,

"If all your money's given out Just send a cheque instead."

Letter From Germany.

STUTTGART, Germany, Feb. 3, 1900.

These Germans are an extremely egotistical race-a sincere, earnest, plodding people, on the average, inclined to stupidity. One often wonders how long they can keep on ; how long they will survive as a power. Necessarily my 1mpressions are not based on very extensive observation, but, still, right here in Stuttgart serious problems confront one and excite thoughtful speculation.

All food products are tifty per cent feit that nothing would satisfy unless mind. Not all the natural sounds put higher here than in New York. Egg. milk, flour, sugar, tea and coffee-especially potators-are very high and of inforior grade to what you are accustomed to. Freeh meat is a luxury. Sausage and dried smoked meat and fish are conishness merely. He seemed very sane, sumed in incredible quantities. Fruit though as sensitive as a musical artist and vegetables are scarcely to be had in must be. I thought that even the long winter, except by persons of more than moderate means. Reots are enormous. Ready-mide articles are very high and generally inferior in quality and make. Household furnishings are much dears r than at Lome. Oue is tempted to wonder who has the money, or is there much to be had ? Relative to Americ in ideas of wealth, there is little here. Labor appears criminally cheap to one accustomed to our wages. A common laborer gets three marks (seventy-five cente) per day and wash-women and seamstresses often not twenty-live cents and seldom over tifty cents. Teachers are, in general, miserably paid. Officials are generally poorly paid, but have the a ivantages of small pensions.

All the population seem to be in the mad rush for the cities here, as at home. Prolifi . indeed, are these Germans, except among the most intelligent classes, where they asldom have more than three children. "Raising cannon food," as Hums or somebody said, seems to be the chief work of the nation.

The fields are generally meagre and are left to the women to till, the men being either in the towns or army. Owners of large agricultural estates complain of the scarcity of farm hands. Under such conditions where is the tood to come from ? From America? The German agriculturists seem more willing their people should starve than get cheap food in that direction.

Colon zation is the national fad here. as in America. Will that solve the problem ?
