Miss Esther Jeannette Green, Mrs. Arthur H. Gleason and Mrs. Frank P. Lawrence gave a reception on Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Green, 1745 Euclid avenue. The door was opened by Master Willie Gerner, who was a pastoral, gracious young shepherd, with his yellow coat, knee trousers, white stockings and shoes, and shepherd's crook, with bells. Miss Ruth Gleason, also in a shepherd's frock, with her hair powdered and done high on her small head, was a dignified, charming young person as she stood beside the diminutive shepherd, card basket in hand. The reception room was in green and white. There were green loopings of triangular shape on the ceiling, which fell in irregular curves over the curtains. The Ideal Mandolin orchestra was seated here behind a wall of palms. In the drawing room was the receiving party, which were Miss Green, Mrs. Arthur H. Gleason, Mrs. Frank P. Lawrence and Mrs. Kildow of York. Miss Green was gowned in black and lavender satin. The waist was made with a vest and a bolero, with handsome jet trimmings. The skirt trained. Mrs. Gleason wore an effective gown of white silk linen with black garnitures. Mrs. Lawrence's gown was of black and white satin. The corsage was white satin covered with a beautiful black applique. Mrs. Kildow was gowned in lavender and white foularde. The bodice was garnished with white silk applique and the skirt trained. There were graceful festoons of white in the room, which were caught here and there on the ceiling, and vases of pink and white roses on the mantel. Mrs. Poynter and Mrs. Porter, assisted by Mesdames Field, Dunn, Pomerene, Casebeer, Jewell, Allen, Castor, Miss Lawrence, Jeannette and Helen Lawrence were also assisting. The library was decorated in a lovely shade of lavender, and its presiding hostess, Mrs. Lavender, whose name and gown were thoughtful enough to harmonize with the prevailing color, served punch at one corner of the room which presented a most cave-like appearance. The walls of the cave were irregular, with juttings and sparkling stalactites. Mrs. Lavender was assisted by Miss Wurt and Miss Maude Miller. In the dining room pink was the reigning color. The ceiling was draped with pink, which was caught in great loops in the center and from here came ropes of smilax wound with pink carnations to the four corners of the table. The table center was Battenburg lace over pink and a great, spreading vase of pink carnations. Mrs. A. E. Rogers, gowned in pink and white mouseline de soie, served the ice. She was assisted by Miss Josephine Poynter, Miss Pearl Hensel, Miss Lindly and Miss Barber.

The Dewey ball given in the Auditorium in Chicago Monday evening, April 30, is said by the connoisseurs to be the most splendid affair of that kind ever given in the city. There were hundreds of people in attendance, and the dress was beautiful and brilliant. The Sunday Chronicle, in speaking of the function, says: "The admiral of the navy was much admired. His splendid bronze face, dashing white moustache, and brilliant dark eyes, set off so well by the wealth of gold lace on his long tailed coat, won men and women alike. The bonhomie and cordiality of the admiral and also his evident enjoyment of the party given in his honor were most winning. He sat most of the time on a raised throne-like seat near Mrs. Dewey and Mrs. Arthur Caton. The wife of the admiral is a comely woman. Rather large, she has dark auburn hair, small eyes, and small, round features in a full and rather heavy face. She wore a gown of white satin, a necklace of diamonds, from which hung five stars of pearls, and in her hair was a large diamond ornament."

and emblazoned on the walls with the shields of the various Spanish provinces and coats of arms of the royal houses. Over the door of the banquet hall was the club motto: "Quien dice Espana dice Toto." Each shield and banner had a rich dark background of pine and balsamic fur of the Maine woods, brought from the ancestral home of the Castilian's president and founder, Mrs. Abba Gould Woolson, in Windham, Me., and everywhere bloomed in graceful profusion red and yellow tulips and jonquils, and the white lilies of Ferdinand de Aguerro, grandfather of Isabella's bridegroom of Arragon. In the balcony was stationed the band of minstrels.

At the upper end of the hall, on a stage dressed in the Spanish colors, Mrs. Woolson, assisted by her vice presidents, Mrs. Crane and Mrs. Nichols, and some ladies of her court, received the guests, who passed with courtly obeisance, before her in review. As each guest approached the throne, he or she halted until the herald, stationed at the left of the stage, commanded the advance with a silvery burst from his trumpet. Then the guest, bending low, answered to the "Quien?" of the herald, Mr. Clarence G. Benedict, with the name for the evening assumed, "Una Dama de Granada." "Una Senora de Seville," or whatever it might be, and as the herald announced the name, its owner bowed low to the company, then turning to the court, made her courtesy,
